His body went rigid. His eyes were wide as he jerked back and disappeared in front of me. I would never forget the heartbreaking expression on his face. That night, my dreams were plague with horror. It was as if something was slowly suffocating me. It was overwhelming! Terrifying! It was so dark and so evil. There was someone hovering over me. Still seeing monsters, Is creamed and hit the form. There was a cry of pain before it tumbled over. Hurried footsteps approached before light illuminated the room. Squinting my eyes, I could see both her and Violet by the door. Confused, I returned the gesture. Maybe Vi can join, too? I expect all of you to keep it down. When the door closed, everyone was sitting on the bed in a circle. I was still half asleep when Is aw Addy. The monsters were still lurking in my mind. I nodded my head. And the things that he had done? Instead, she changed the subject. Her mother was absolutely jealous! It was so weird. She had this ugly mask on. My laptop was turned on in front of her. From the corner of my eyes, I thought I caught a glimpse of his face outside the window, but when I turned to look, there was no one there. It was odd not being with him, now. Suddenly, the stuffed animal was snatched away from under my hand. I gave Violet a disapproving look. I stretched out my hand to take it back, but stopped. It was probably for the best. I had to move on. The only way to do that was to let go of the things that reminded me of him, but there was just so much Addy obediently followed while I reluctantly left behind my memories of him. The darkness meant less shadows. I clumsily trekked to the bed before planting myself on the soft mattress. There was no way that I was going to go anywhere else without injuring myself in here. We continued our conversation regarding the house. When Addy mentioned her friends in here, neither Violet nor I doubted her anymore. We were, however, worried that the other-worldly residents may bring harm to our family. She made her way out the door without waiting for our reply. Worriedly and curious, we carefully followed her. She led us to the entrance of the basement. The door was creaky and I stared down, it was pitch black. He had told me not to go there, but! What did his words even mean to me, now? I tiptoed down the stairs behind Violet who was following Addy. As my feet touched the cold concrete floor, I saw two faces staring back from just beyond the railing. I jumped in shock. One was dressed in a green and black striped shirt, while the other had on red and black. Instead of being insulted, Addy merely laughed. It was rather unnerving. Violet was immediately riled up. Their cackles could be heard echoing in the cold basement. Addy was unperturbed with their departure. Instead, she led them further in. One of the rooms held two girls and a woman. Their entire body was covered with burns. I was too afraid to even approach them, but Addy was having a conversation with the mother who was staring at me with an eerie look in her eyes. Taking a step backward, I bumped into another body and jumped in fear. When I turned around, I saw Moira. My heart settled down. I was more than happy to leave. He paced the attic. The rubber suit was thrown into a corner. He was frustrated, angry, and heartbroken. His Madi had told him to leave her alone. How dare she do that to him?! What was he going to do? Madi was his happiness. She was his light. For so many years, he had nothing to look forward to. This accursed house was one long, boring day that never wanted to end. She made him feel alive. He clenched his eyes shut and hit himself in the head over and over, again. Why was he even pretending that there was ever going to be any happiness for him in the living world? He was growing as crazy as his cock-sucking mother. His face suddenly split into a grin. The house would corrupt her innocence. He felt just as lost as the day that he died and reappeared in the basement. Time seemed to be moving without him. Life went on for everyone else. Madi probably always had the lingering suspicion, mainly because of how close she and Tate were, but denial is a powerful thing. Did any of you see that coming? If not, how did you think it was going to go? Would you guys hate me if I kept them apart? Not in the show, of course. No one there is sane. Seems like Tate did exactly what you thought he was going to do! But sometimes, these characters seem to have a mind of their own and go into a completely different direction. No amount of outlining seem to deter them! Thank you as well to everyone who has favoured and followed this story! Let me make you a promise: Your review has been
