I found out today they are very easy to tell a part if you know what to look for. See the cute little "L" shaped pieces sticking out of the punch card reader? I put a 24 stitch punch card pattern into my 12 stitch punch card machine. I was told it was a brother card. Dropped stitches, dropped yarn, and just a general big tangle of a mess ensues. This is punch card numbered 1. Other 24 stitch punch cards worked fairly well with my machine. Using incorrect card for an every other stitch pattern. When I got my machine I was told it was a 24 stitch machine. Now that I know what to look for I want to do a "V-8" forehead smack and say duh! Card I was using. Count holes across one line. Fortunately, a friend of mine has the cards that go to this type of machine. I knew my problem had to be the operator and not the machine. I feel greatly relieved to have learned a very valuable machine knitting lesson today. I am SO glad when more experienced machine knitters wanted to take a part my punch card reader with a screw driver I said no. Thank you to my daughter and her abs of steel for this picture.
