Chapter 1 : The Crossword Murder (Crossword Mysteries, #1) by Nero Blanc

The Crossword Murder is the first book in the Crossword Mysteries series by husband wife team Cordelia Biddles & Steve Zettler, who write under the pseudonym Nero Blanc. I've had it for awhile and am glad that I finally read it.

And you recently acquired a copy: He had had the book for years but had not been able to solve the puzzle. I showed it to friends. I showed it to visitors to the museum. I used it with students and writers and it became more and more fascinating and more and more complex. Was your call for help in these pages last year helpful? Yes, thanks to that message a contact was made. A significant contact, as it turns out. And how satisfied are you that you now know the correct solution? Edward Powys Mathers first came to the attention of the literary world with the publication of his translations and versions of Asiatic love poems. Even at this early stage, there was an element of masquerade, as he introduced poems that were not translations but composed by Powys Mathers himself. He was heartened by the eager acceptance of his own poems; he created alter egos Mr J Wing and Mr John Duncan and disguised his authorship under their names. His Observer crossword persona, Torquemada, was created in and he created more than puzzles using the name of the feared Spanish Inquisitor. And now the competition is re-opening? I kept showing the book to friends and writers who came to Shandy Hall. This means that they can be spread out and placed next to each other " so much easier than when pages are bound, as in the original publication. A space for notes is provided as well as a page to submit with the answer. Only solutions submitted on a page from the box will be eligible. Beautifully executed and mathematically incredible, the game is now in its third issue and bringing income to the Trust. Hopefully, we will reach the target and the book will become a reality. I hope so, too. More details at Unbound.
