Marie speaks out on marriage of Carol April 5, Queen Marie of Romania spoke to the Associated Press concerning the morganatic marriage of her son, Carol, and on other matters. The interview was conducted in Bucharest on April 1. She is intelligent and ambitious. She saw her chance to obtain a great advantage, and she took it. It was against this that the country sought a foreign king. Associated with patriotic Roumanians, he saw his duty and realized how foolish he had been to lose his country for a girl. Lately, he has accepted a mission to Japan, where he will stay for six months. Should the girl marry another person, the affair will be ended. She is always "cheerful and brave," even during the "darkest hour of their history. There I opposed the peace which we finally were compelled to make. I was for sticking it out to the bitter end. Before I had to leave our capital I suffered the terrible grief of losing my youngest child. We had many dark hours in Jassy, cut off from our allies. With the bolsheviki operating in Russia, we felt like shipwrecked persons on a desert island. I am sure that anyone who invests money here will get a return with a handsome profit. We have several loans offered us and we would accept them if the conditions were reasonable and we could adopt methods of payment, such as our oil and timber. Our pockets are empty now because the national treasury is deposited in Russia, as well as the crown jewels. Why did not Emperor William stipulate in the Brest-Litovsk treaty for the safety of the czar? This war has advanced the power of woman. She can never go back. I say this without being an ardent or violent feminist. I never wish to vote myself, but I have sympathized with those who think that they can be useful to their country in that way.

The personal blog of wordsmith, researcher, and author Carol Wolf.

He succumbed earlier today of a heart attack at his home in Estoril, Portugal, reports Reuters. He was 59 years old. His third wife, Princess Elena, the former Elena Lupescu, was at his bedside when he died. He said the former King had felt "well until just before midnight, when he was suddenly taken ill. Carol II had lived in Estoril, "a fashionable seaside resort," about 15 miles from Lisbon, since October. The king, who was known as the "playboy monarch," had lived in exile since 1947, when he was forced to abdicate in "favor of son, by the pro-German dictator Ion Antonescu. Carol was the first member of royal family to be born on Romanian soil. At the time of his birth, Carol was second in line to the throne after his father, who was the heir apparent to his uncle, King Carol I. Although he served in Romanian army during the first world war, he "showed little interest in military affairs. The marriage was annulled before Zizi gave birth to their son, Mircea. The marriage was already in trouble. The couple soon separated, and a divorce was granted in 1925. For the second time, Carol ceased to be the heir to the throne. His reputation as a playboy was largely due to his affair with a Romanian commoner, Elena Wolff, who was "better known as Magda Lupescu. Lupescu, "much to the chagrin of his father. Carol was thwarted in his attempt to return home and claim his throne. It was not until 1940, when Carol "secretly left Paris by train for Munich" where he boarded a private plane for Bucharest. No one was at the airport to meet him so he went straight to the Army barracks, and was "escorted" to Cotroceni palace, where his younger brother, Prince Nicholas, a member of the regency, received him "with great joy. The government offered Carol a place in the Regency, but he wanted the throne. The Regency was abolished on June 8, and Carol took the oath as the new king of Romania. His eight-year-old son, Michael, was named as Crown Prince. Elena Lupescu soon joined him in Bucharest. He did not meet with his former wife, Princess Helen, who later declared that there would be no reconciliation. Martial law was declared, and Carol expelled his brother, Prince Nicholas, from the country. This action brought more "bad feeling and open opposition of the Iron Guards," who were determined to force the King to send Mrs. After the start of the second World War, opposition to the King intensified, and he was forced to abdicate on September 6, 1940. His son, Michael, became king for the second time. The former king tried to enter the United States, but was denied permission. He and Elena settled in Rio de Janeiro. Lupescu became "gravely ill," they married in a "dramatic death bed ceremony permissible under Brazilian law. King Michael and his wife, Anne, now live in Switzerland. On February 10, 1941, the Queen gave birth to a third daughter. Former Queen Helen lives in Florence, Italy.
