

Chapter 1 : A Secret about the Secret Forest :: Stardew Valley General Discussions

The Secret in The West Woods revolves around sixth grader Jack Kidman, who has come to Ohio from Seattle to help out his grandfather. He teams up with the feisty Regan Wirsing and the two begin a search for the legendary Ansel's Cave in The West Woods, an actual Ohio location.

The activity of healthful, recreational bonding has been passed down from generation to generation, all with little worry about the dangers of the forests and mountains. But the public has been practising this popular pastime without the knowledge that over people have disappeared from our national parks and open spaces in the past years. Strangely, a big percentage of these disappearances have clues in common: Huckleberries, dogs, swamps and bad weather. The year saw more national park disappearances than in the past 27 years combined. The Beginning Paulides, with a career in law enforcement, first learned of the disappearances from national park employees who confided their concerns to him about the inordinate amount of missing campers from the parks and the mystery surrounding them. When he began digging for information he saw the 28 clusters of disappearances around the country, the number one cluster being Yosemite National Park, near San Jose where Paulides had served as a police officer. Strange Similarities Between Disappearances Most of those who have disappeared are children ages 20 months to 12 years and the elderly ages 74 to Not one person carrying a firearm and only one carrying a transponder device has disappeared. Typically, a search is initiated and run for about ten days then dropped. Fifty percent of the children who go missing are found dead, and the ones who are found are found miles away from where they disappeared, in areas seemingly impossible for them to get to on their own. The majority of children who have disappeared had dogs with them. In some cases, the dogs returned, but the children never did. In all cases, the parents say that the child was right behind them when they disappeared. Usually, the children are wearing bright, colorful clothing when they disappear, and even if they are found miles away without the shoes they were wearing, their feet are not scratched or bruised. Yosemite National Park, with 40 to 45 cases, has the largest cluster of vanishings and oddly, in most areas where the disappearances have occurred, huckleberries are almost always in great abundance. In 95 percent of the cases, bad weather strangely follows a disappearance, washing out footprints and other clues and making it impossible to carry on a search until the weather clears. In 98 to 99 percent of the cases, tracking dogs are unable to find a scent or simply refuse to track. Almost 98 percent of the disappearances occur in the afternoon. Searchers have been known to cover an area over times, only to later find the person, alive or dead in the same area they searched before. Later, an attorney called Paulides and asked him why he wanted the information. Thinking the foolish parents were nearby, the couple moved on and later drove home. The next morning they saw a photo of the missing child in the newspaper, and recognizing him as the child they had seen, they drove back to the park to tell the searchers but the young boy was never found. A two year-old boy was visiting his grandparents in Ritter, Oregon in when he disappeared. He was found unconscious 19 hours later in a frozen creek bed. To arrive there, the small toddler would have had to run non-stop 12 miles across two mountain peaks in those 19 hours, quite impossible considering his age and size. The FBI refused to give Paulides any information on the disappearance of another small two year-old boy who disappeared in Yosemite in Bloodhounds and hundreds of people searched for him. He apparently climbed feet straight up a mountain. One of the strangest finds by rangers was a missing man who was found leaning against a log, his pants around his ankles. The only parts left of him were part of his tibia in his right pant leg and part of his skull and his scapula bones in one inch by one inch pieces. Young girls also disappear in the national parks. In Yosemite in , a 14 year-old girl was backpacking on horseback with her parents and a group of people up feet to Sunrise High Sierra Camp. When they stopped to rest, the girl asked if she could go with a 70 year-old man on the trip 50 feet away to take some photos. The old man sat down on a log, and the girl went to the edge of an elevation to take a photo of a lake down below. She walked down the hill and never came back. The FBI agent told Paulides he would never get the information on this case, that it was none of his business. In another more recent Yosemite case, a young woman was found dead at the bottom of a high cliff from where it seemed she had been flung. This happened in in Newcomb, New York when an 8 year-old boy vanished while walking back to a lodge to change his clothes. His scent was lost in a swamp and he was never found. Paulides said the case that really bothers him the most is of a 6 year-old boy who disappeared in in the Great Smokey Mountains. Two families with the last name of Martin happened upon each other, and their two sons began playing hide and seek in the nearby bushes. A rainstorm began as he ran down the hill. At the same time, further down the hill, another family with the last name of Key heard a sickening scream and looked up to see what they thought at first was a man hiding in the bushes. The Green Berets showed up again and took over the search completely. Martin stayed in the park two months looking for his son, who was never found. In researching his books, Paulides visited Martin, the father, who told Paulides that when the Key family spotted the man in the bushes, he or it was carrying something on its shoulder; however none of this information the Key family proffered was included in the FBI report. Twelve other people have disappeared in the same area and the FBI agent monitoring those cases allegedly committed suicide. The phenomena is not limited to the U. In the Philippines, many people have disappeared, most never returning. The bright colors seem to attract whatever it is that takes the people. This clue is similar to the American children who have disappeared wearing bright clothing. In his books and in interviews Paulides does give some possible reasons for the disappearances. Some mention how upset they are that the NPS would keep this information to themselves, most likely to protect income from park visits. New York Times bestselling author Whitely Streiber said the books are sobering and chilling and too well-researched to ignore. He was camping with a friend when he ran off shoeless, chasing his dog downhill toward a stream. His friend searched for hours, then had to hike two days out of the wilderness to find help. The area being searched is two times the size of the Grand Canyon. Like others who have disappeared into the national forests, Herdman was found at approximately feet above the river bottom which he had chased his dog into the day he disappeared. When his remains were discovered authorities were astonished to find him shoeless. Rescue crews spent nearly 5, man-hours searching and covered 50 square miles on foot and horseback, as well as by air, including the use of two drones. The sheriff stated it was unimaginable that a shoeless person could have traversed so far in such rough terrain.

Laurel Oak Trail A 1,foot mulched nature trail that takes you from a hardwood hammock through a tidal marsh area and back. When you begin your walk along the Laurel Oak Trail, you are surrounded by laurel oaks, live oaks, sabal palms, wild coffee, green- and red-tipped cocoplum, beautyberry, and white stopper. As you continue down the trail, you will come to a series of four bridges that will carry you through a tidal marsh. There are several seating areas along the way. Your journey begins in a hardwood hammock where you are surrounded by native Florida vegetation such as laurel oak trees, sabal palms, white stopper, wild coffee, strangler figs, and cocoplum. As you get closer to the river, you will come to a tidal marsh area. The boardwalk will then rise above the water line, and you will be able to walk through a tidal marsh area that is completely under water during high tide. There you will see leather ferns, red and white mangroves, pond apple trees, and cypress. The center opened in October and includes a working beehive, along with a reptile habitat with snakes native to the area. Three computer kiosks feature interactive programs about plant, animal, and marine life, as well as weather and soil. There are also displays of Native American artifacts, and a mural depicting Native Americans as they approach historic Stranahan House to trade their wares. Public Art and Design The Monarch Interpretive Center is home to a project called Metamorphosis, a ceramic tile floor by Raymond Olivero that represents the flight pattern of the butterfly. This site-specific, integrated artwork fuses nature with art and design. In short, the butterfly offers the greatest degree of aesthetic and metaphorical possibilities. Nature center staff can customize a lesson plan to meet the needs of most groups looking to learn more about the local environment. For program information and reservations, call the park office at Broward County Transit The nature center is accessible via Route 6. A Little History When the approximately 30 acres known as the Rebecca Cohen Subdivision were scheduled for rezoning to make way for a marina parking lot in , there was an outcry from local citizens who wanted to preserve their "secret woods. Broward County made an agreement with the Nature Conservancy to purchase the land back within three years. In , and over the next decade, the county purchased additional parcels of land while also receiving some donations, to bring the park to its current size of 57 acres. Wildlife This nature center is home to wildlife. If you have questions regarding wildlife or wish additional information, please call the park number above. The following safety tips are recommended for our guests: Alligators, snakes, and other animals live in this area. Do not approach, feed, or taunt alligators, snakes, or other wildlife. No swimming or wading except in designated areas. Use common sense while in this nature center.

Some retailers hire companies to evaluate the quality of service in their stores; they often use mystery shoppers to get the information. They instruct a mystery shopper to make a particular purchase in a store or restaurant, and then report on the experience. Typically, the shopper is reimbursed and can keep the product or service. Sometimes the shopper receives a small payment, as well. Many professionals in the field consider mystery shopping a part-time activity, at best. And, they add, opportunities generally are posted online by marketing research or merchandising companies. The certification offered is almost always worthless. A list of companies that hire mystery shoppers is available for free, and legitimate mystery shopper jobs are listed on the internet for free. If you try to get a refund from the promoters, you will be out of luck. The shopper receives a check with instructions to deposit it in a personal bank account, withdraw the amount in cash, and wire it to a third party. The check is a fake. By law, banks must make the funds from deposited checks available within days, but uncovering a fake check can take weeks. It may seem that the check has cleared and that the money has posted to the account, but when the check turns out to be a fake, the person who deposited the check and wired the money will be responsible for paying back the bank. Check libraries, bookstores, or online sites for tips on how to find legitimate companies hiring mystery shoppers, as well as how to do the job effectively. Search the internet for reviews and comments about mystery shopping companies that are accepting applications online. Shills may be paid to post positive reviews. Never wire money as part of a mystery shopping assignment. Charge a fee for access to mystery shopping opportunities. Sell directories of companies that hire mystery shoppers. Ask you to deposit a check and wire some or all of the money to someone.

The Secret Rulers of the World. I have trouble believing what I witnessed with my own two eyes. It was actually that bizarre. Almost immediately, bizarre rumors began to circulate in the local press that something dark and occult was going on. The rumors entailed dark stories of men in black and red robes and a giant foot stone owl, to which something, or someone was being sacrificed. Alex Jones, being a radio talk-show host had heard the rumors many times, so he decided to look into it and did some research. World leaders were traveling yearly to the rural redwood-covered hills of Northern California and photos actually existed of the giant stone owl and the men in black and red robes. On July 15, , Alex Jones and his assistant Mike, equipped with two hidden video cameras and disguised as members of the Bohemian Club successfully infiltrated the elite cult compound. One of the most commonly asked questions is: How did they get in? Following is a transcript of a taped interview with Alex Jones, who describes his infiltration of the super-secret elitist camp and what he witnessed inside: The club itself consists of large log cabin-style homes built into the gorge walls. There is only one entrance on the north side of the compound, which is a paved road, appropriately named "Bohemian Avenue. Simply stated, the Bohemian Grove is a walled city. After being dropped off near the Bohemian Club, we inserted ourselves into the woods about yards from the main entrance. After going over the barbed wire fence, we found ourselves in what can only be described as a moat. The entire area along the road to the foot of the cliff walls had been dug out and flooded. We were able to make our way across the expansive swamp by jumping from broken tree limbs and other debris. After climbing up a steep embankment, pulling our way up by gripping on tree roots, we found ourselves in a large parking lot, with hundreds of cars. At about yards through the trees, we saw a much larger parking lot, filled with more late-model, luxury-style cars. Obviously, this was the parking area of the actual 2, members of the Bohemian Club. When you come in on the main road, the moat, the swamp and the embankment are off to the right off to the west just 50 yards of so. By going across the swamp or moat, we made our way past the first two checkpoints, which consisted of a small guard shack on the left-hand side of the road and another 50 yards down the road another guard shack on the right-hand side of the road. There was a checkpoint in the middle of the road a large guard shack with several dozen security people and then guard shacks on the left and right sides of the road, which were kind of like the German-style checkpoints you see in old news reels. I told Mike I thought it would be a good idea if we tried to get on one of the large trucks the flat-back open trucks that had padded seats that were actually picking up members of the Bohemian Club as well as the employees. So, we went ahead and walked through the woods to the Bohemian Club member parking area and waited for one of the large trucks to pull up, at which time myself and Mike climbed onto the back with two older gentlemen. Mike and myself made small-talk conversation as we got onto the black-top road and drove deeper into the Grove, now approaching these larger checkpoints. In the two or three minutes that we were on board the truck, we caught an interesting conversation on tape, as two of the members discussed the prices of their ceremonial robes all of that is in my video, Dark Secrets: Our first close call happened as we neared the main checkpoint. The truck actually stopped, at which time an older, gray-haired man made eye contact with the driver of the truck and walked around the back of the truck to stare myself and Mike right in the eye. The guards went ahead and waved us on with a look of suspicion. Then we were inside the Bohemian Grove. We had heard all of the bizarre rumors and were about to find out what was really going on inside. The mystery was getting closer to being solved. The truck drove in for several more minutes and stopped at which time we off-loaded. I told Mike that I wanted to get to cover. It took us about 45 minutes to an hour to walk all the way through to the bottom of the gorge, at which point the road actually ended and a cars could no longer drive on it, as it turned into a concrete-paved, blacktop foot-path. We reached the end of the gorge, which is an observation deck at the top of a foot cliff overlooking the Russian River and the small town of Monte Rio on the other side. It was my plan to have the least amount of contact with the Bohemian Club members and staff as I could and to wait until nightfall to attempt to get out our hidden cameras and to catch the Cremation of Care ceremony on tape. At this point, I should digress and go back and say that as we were walking into the Grove we came within about ten yards of the 40 foot stone owl that sits to the north side of the small lake. We were only about seven yards away from the black altar that sits at the base of the owl. So, already at this point we had proven a big rumor true: So, now we had been there about an hour at the observation deck. There was no one around. I believe he was the Sheriff, and he started speaking to us in some kind of code. He looked directly at me and said, "Were you here in ? Are you one of the old ones? All the different club houses and log cabin-style mansions that are built into the cliffs have different names and different memberships. The Hillbilly Camp is the camp that the Bushes are members of, along with many other notables in American industry, banking, media and government. At that point he smiled and said, "Well, enjoy the day. About half-way into the gorge, we noticed that two men in dark suits and sunglasses were following us. I decided to slow down. I gave them my fake name and Mike gave them his fake name, and we told them that we were members of the Hillbilly Club. At this point, we had been confronted twice and were now being followed. I told Mike that we had to get into a heavily populated area where a lot of the Grove members were congregating. So we went into several of the clubs and almost had our identities blown. We went in and had a few drinks, because everyone was drinking copiously and they were offering us wine in some of the clubhouses. We then got back on the road and into a large outdoor feasting area, where hundreds of tables were being set from some party or revelry. I told Mike we should go up the steep road into the hills where some of the larger structures were located. It took us about 20 minutes to walk up the road into the only hills that were accessible by foot. We told them that we wanted exercise, at which point they started acting pretty suspicious. We noticed that high up in the hills many of the large log cabin structures were deserted, with many large outside decks. So we went into the Web Camp and just made ourselves comfortable. The camps have different names like Lost Boys, Doom, Dragon etc. We simply sat out the next hour, reloaded our hidden cameras and got them back into place. By then, the shadows were getting long and it was just a few minutes until dusk. We started to hear bizarre chanting and singing coming from down below us in the gorge. So we traveled back into the gorge. On our way back down, we saw thousands of men chanting and singing drunkenly beneath the giant redwoods. It was like something out of a fantasy novel. I expected to see a dragon come hopping by any moment. There were huge skulls hanging down from the floodlights, satanic-styled owls with glowing eyes, a lot of trappings of death that we could now see in the twilight illuminated by the large floodlights. The feasting revelers were beginning to break up and to travel down paths towards the lake. We decided to go ahead and mix in with them and go where they were going. They were going towards the east side of the bank about yards across the north tip of the lake where the idol and altar stood. He said, "trouble yourselves not! The cares of the world are off your shoulders! On the cover of the program, they show Moloch, the big owl, with a burning body enflamed beneath it the program can be viewed at infowars. The sun had now sunk behind the hill. There were bats flying around and a lot of natural fog building on the surface of the water there is a lot of fog in Northern California that time of year. This was spooky stuff. The hair on the back of my neck was beginning to stand up at this point. Then, out of the woods, all of the sudden came thirty priests in black robes, their faces painted up like death, with a man dressed like the Grim Reaper pulling a wagon with a bound body. Then we noticed something that we had seen during the day. The men then began to yell out, "burn him again! Now, I must digress and say that the reason I was able to see the priest in the black robes, the priest painted-up like death, and the bound body on the back of the wagon, was because they were all carrying torches. The place was pretty illuminated by the torches being carried by the thirty priests in front and the thirty priests behind the wagon. Probably out of the entire ritual that I witnessed, the most important aspect of the ceremony was what happened first. The wagon went behind these big black sheets hanging out of the trees, down to the ground, obscuring the view, and for about 10 minutes nothing happened. It was quiet except for the hateful shouts of the old men, who said things like, "Oh yeah! This went on and on. No one was paying attention to that. Everyone was disoriented as they stared across the water at whatever was happening behind those black curtains with that bound body. Whether it was an effigy or real, we do not know. They claim that the video shows them slitting the throats of ceremonial effigies. Is all of this in effigy? We were all focused at what was going on across the pond. Suddenly the owl was lit up by some flood lights and out ran a hundred priests or so in black, red and green robes. Most of them were in black, some in red and a couple in silver or green robes.

The Secret Woods is an area that can be entered from the North-West corner of Cindersap Forest, South of The Farm. Entrance is initially blocked by a fallen log that can be cleared after upgrading to a Steel Axe.

Frustrated by life in the "Civilized World", a former ranter moves to the woods of West Virginia to find a life of peace and simplicity with his trusty dog Dooley. Sunday, December 30, Wash and wear. Today was wash day. I have things hanging all over the cabin. Got me to thinking readers might want to know about my wardrobe here in the middle of nowhere. Here is a list of my complete wardrobe, summer and winter. I have three pairs of jeans. I keep two of them for everyday wear and one is put aside for special occasions. I have five shirts. Two flannel and three cotton. All are long sleeve. I have no use for short sleeved shirts or shirts without a collar. I have six pair of socks because socks are what I change the most frequently. I prefer heavy socks hunting style because they are warm in the winter and protect from blisters in the summer when I am more active. I have two black sweat shirts for cool Spring and Fall evenings. I have two pairs of Rocky brand name boots, both water proof and one pair is taller than the other. Right now I have a nice pair of Russell Moccasins that I got with a gift card from Anita the dog groomer last year for my birthday. They should last me a long time. If you promise not to tell anyone I will also admit to having a pair of panty hose that I wear when I hunt or otherwise go off trail to keep the ticks out of sensitive places. Summer necessitates washing shirts and socks and underwear once a week. I often wear the same pair of jeans for up to two weeks if possible. If I am working on the chicken coop or goat pen I usually have to change them sooner. In the winter I wash much less frequently. I use captured rain water for washing because I use so much—especially for rinsing. The soap I use I think I have mentioned this before is a mixture of Fels Naptha, washing soda and borax that I mix up three or four times a year. Firewood Kenny suggested I substitute a dilution Dawn dishwashing liquid for the Fels Naptha and I might try that next time my soap runs out. I already have a supply of Dawn in the cabin that I use for just about everything that requires soap for cleaning. In fact, my favorite general purpose cleaning solution is a combination of Dawn and bleach. The Goodwill store is a wonderful place! I shop there because I can still find clothes there that were not cheaply made by children in Asia. American made clothes really last. My favorite everyday work shirts are Dickies. When they have them I prefer Wigwam socks. This year I will be looking for a new belt, a summer shirt and Dooley need a new blanket. Well, the clothes are drying nicely.
