Chapter 3 : The Secret Life of the American Teenager (TV Series "â€") - IMDb

"The Secret Life of Star-Sapphire!": While out flying in her private jet, Carol Ferris is captured by the Zamarons, alien warrior women who have selected her to become their next queen based on her exact resemblance of their former ruler.

Though their roots can be traced back to the earliest appearances of the Star Sapphire queens, they have entered into a significant plot role as part of the "Blackest Night" crossover event. At present, members of the Star Sapphires have only been depicted as being females. Ferris explains that while under the possession of the stone, she learned a number of things about its history and capabilities. They said they would continue on their own existence living with emotions, starting with love. They searched the universe for billions of years for the thing the Guardians feared, and eventually found it on a planet called Zamaron. They learned of love from the first Star Sapphire gem, which was discovered locked between the embrace of two crystallized skeletons inside a cave. She describes another Star Sapphire falling in love with a Green Lantern and encasing his world in violet crystal so that the two could be together forever. She also mentions that the Star Sapphire gem is like the green power rings used by Green Lanterns and the yellow power rings used by Sinestro Corps members. Jordan uses his ring to grant Ferris enhanced abilities needed to help fight Cowgirl. The two fight with the Star Sapphire and she is defeated by their combined efforts. An energy vortex opens in the room and a voice is shown as saying that "a new Corps is rising and so must ours. Though she is able to do so, the stone immobilizes the two Earth women while the Zamarons gain the upper hand over Jordan. The stone asks Jordan which of the two women he desires most, and that the woman he chooses will be able to be with him forever. In response, Jordan kisses one of the Zamarons, convincing the stone to release its hostages Cowgirl and Carol Ferris, and possess her instead. They are shown transforming the Star Sapphire into a violet power ring which they place on a pedestal along with a violet power battery. Depicted in the same room as the violet ring and battery, are a green and yellow set of power rings and power batteries. Upon revealing this to the reader, the Zamarons comment that they "must collect them all. It both introduces important members of the new corps and reveals distinguishing features which set them apart from their peers. At the beginning of the arc, the Zamarons have crafted their own main power battery. Inside of their main battery are the crystallized "Adam and Eve" skeletons and Star Sapphire gem found when they first arrived on Zamaron. While experimenting with their new means of controlling the violet light of love, the Zamarons perhaps intentionally attracted the attention of the Guardians on Oa. Perceiving their visible power fluctuations as a threat, Guardian Scar decides to act on the display rather than wait and "hope for the best. The rings are shown being drained of their power which Arisia interprets as a deliberate display of how the same could be done to green power rings. More importantly, the delegates also discover that a number of female Sinestro Corps members have also been collected after the war and are imprisoned in violet crystals. The yellow light of fear is being drained from their rings and replaced with the violet light of love. The delegate meeting ends poorly for the Oans, as the Zamarons refuse to stop their pursuit of the violet light. Kered approaches Mongul to ask him to spare their jet packs and enough food for them to find help. After Mongul leaves, Miri drifts in space alone for two days before deciding to kill herself out of grief. Before she is able to complete her suicide, a violet power ring finds her and offers to fill the hole in her heart with violet light. Miri accepts and becomes the first new recruit to the Star Sapphires. Through their temporary partnership they are able to defeat the yellow ring wielder. After undergoing treatment within a violet conversion crystal, Fatality emerges as a newly transformed Star Sapphire. She admits that revenge is no longer her goal, and that she has other plans. After a divorce and giving up the chance at being with Hal Jordan, he is no longer in her life and a hole in her heart has formed. While flying his former plane, the Zamarons send her one of their new violet power rings to fill it. Tales of the Corps 2 July In Tales of the Star Sapphires: Lost Love, Ferris initially expects to be possessed by her violet power ring as had been the case with the Star Sapphire gem. The ring explains to her that the Zamarons have changed service to the Star Sapphires: The ring reveals that Ferris has the potential of becoming the most powerful Star Sapphire, and also has the ability of leading the Star Sapphires into war alongside the Green Lantern Corps. At the end of the story, the power ring keeps its word and does not recruit Ferris until she gives it permission. She is, however, manipulated by being told that her love Hal Jordan may die depending upon the outcome of the War of Light. By joining the Star Sapphires, Ferris may be able to prevent that from happening. Carol Ferris is depicted confronting the Sinestro Corps robot, Tekik, as conflict between the two Corps rages in the background. During the conflict, the conversion crystals are compromised and the Sinestro Corps members inside are released. Kryb begs Miri to help her find her children promising to return to Zamaron of her own free will if Miri helps her. Back on Zamaron the battle takes an unexpected turn when deceased Sinestro Corps members resurrected as Black Lantern arrive. The battle rages on until two black rings head for the violet Central Power Battery, bonding to the two crystallized lovers inside who are Prince Khufu and his consort Chay-ara; the original forms of Hawkman and Hawkgirl. The two are transformed into Black Lanterns and their escape causes the battery to explode, causing widespread devastation to the planet and freeing the Predator. For that mission the Zamarons contacted Carol Ferris on Earth, and reveal to her that the Predator was on the planet. While searching for the violet emotional entity, Carol travels to Las Vegas where she locates the Predator, now inhabiting the body of a man who is infatuated with a woman who does not even know who he is, and defeats it alongside Larfleeze and Hal who also had come searching for the love entity. Carol and the Predator with the help from Hawkman and Hawkgirl tried to stop the Queen from taking the power of the Battery for herself, until the Predator bonded with the Queen. For love will conquer all. The vice president of Ferris Aircraft, former love interest of Hal Jordan, and previous bearer of the position: After employing Jordan for a time as a pilot with Ferris Aircraft, he claims he cannot be near her without being with her. As she does not date employees, he left to resume his career in the United States Air Force. The lover of the now deceased Green Lantern of space sector from the planet Xanador, whose extreme interpretation of "love" caused her to kill her lover and encase their world in a violet crystal so that they could "be together forever". A princess from the planet Xanshi and former member of the Sinestro Corps, who was captured by the Zamarons after the Sinestro Corps War and sealed in a violet crystal meant to rehabilitate her yellow power ring. A newly-wed from the planet Lartnec who was heading for her honeymoon when she and her new husband Kered were attacked by the space tyrant Mongul. Mongul destroyed their ship, murdered Kered, and leaves Miri to drift in space alone. Planning to follow her husband into death, her suicide is interrupted by the arrival of a violet power ring that offers to fill the hole of [her] broken heart with the light of the Star Sapphire and Miri accepts. A female alien with yellow skin that is first featured in Blackest Night promotional imagery. First featured and named in promotional imagery for the Blackest Night event, her appearance and identity are presently unknown. Abraham Pointe of Sector The second male to belong to the Star Sapphires, who did not possess a violet ring, but was chosen to be the host of the Predator. Khea Taramka of Sector The Queen of Hawkworld, while not possessing a ring, as the current host of the Predator, she does not need one. Krona of Sector 0: The fourth male to belong to the Star Sapphires. Superman-Prime of Sector Superman-Prime temporarily became a member of the Star Sapphires during the Blackest Night storyline when a black power ring temporarily transforms him into a Star Sapphire. Also the first male to become a member of the Star Sapphires. Wonder Woman of Sector An Amazonian warrior and princess chosen to be a deputy member of the Corps. Aphrodite, the Goddess of Love, is depicted as aiding Diana in accepting the ring. While other Corps exclusively recruit their members by sending out their rings in search of sentient beings, the Star Sapphires are also shown as being able to convert other Corps members into Star Sapphires. By encasing the members of other Corps within violet rehabilitation crystals on Zamaron, the light of their rings is slowly transformed into violet, whereupon they emerge as newly formed Star Sapphires, such as Yrra Cynril Fatality. Karu-Sil of Sector Captured after the Sinestro Corps War. Sinestro of Sector While trying to free the others, Sinestro faces Carol Ferris. She briefly encases him inside of a conversion crystal, but after being shown a memory of his former paramour, Arin Sur, Sinestro is enraged and breaks free by himself. We never see what he does, but Lobo breaks out thanking her "for the peep show. Statements by Fatality after her ring is destroyed seem to indicate that the conversion process instead forces the convert to feel love regardless of their actual feelings, placing them essentially under mind control. Finally, the Predator started to court Carol who did not know that the Predator was a part of herself and battled Hal Jordan for her love. During the Blackest Night, it was revealed through the Guardian known as "Scar" that the Predator is actually the sentient embodiment of Love: The Predator, like all the other emotional entities, was attracted to Earth by the Entity and is now being hunted by Krona. The white entity intones for Hal, Carol, and Sinestro to find them before it is too late. There the Predator possessed a man named Abraham Pointe, who was obsessed with a woman named Lisa. Discovered by Carol, Hal, and Larfleeze, the four battled within a casino as the Predator-possessed Abraham attempted to reach Lisa. Knowing the only way to win was to allow Abraham to feel love, Carol kissed the man and severed his connection to the Predator. Carol successfully defended the Predator from having the Zamarrons imprisoning it back within the Star Sapphire Central Power Battery and, in doing so, became the new Queen of the Star Sapphires. The Predator then proceeded to bond with the evil queen, [54] however the entity was soon drawn out of its host by the love felt between Hawkman and Hawkgirl. She is equipped with an arsenal of weapons, including a replicate Zamaron star sapphire, of unknown origin. She also has a variety of personal powers, though whether they stem from herself or her personal armament is unclear. She is also able to access the memories of the Zamorans regarding the Star Sapphire gem, such as the experiences of other wearers. As with the powers of the woman bearing the title of Star Sapphire, the limitations of the Star Sapphire gem are also unclear. Psychologically, the women serving as Star Sapphire have displayed a bizarre preoccupation with gender, suspected of reflecting a pathological fear of men. They also have had a less than accurate grasp of the variations in physics between dimensions.

Her family owns the Ferris Aircraft company, where she acts as an executive, and sometimes as a pilot. She is also Star Sapphire, a once villainous character occupying another part of her personality entirely. In the Star Sapphire Corps, where she fights for love across the universe, she has taken on a more heroic role. Origin Carl Ferris, owner of the Ferris Aircraft Company, decided to retire and travel the world, leaving his daughter, Carol Ferris, president of his company. Carol hired Hal Jordan and quickly found herself attracted to the fearless test pilot, but would not date him because he was her employee. Carol Ferris also fell in love with the hero, the Green Lantern, unaware that he was Hal Jordan himself. Becoming Star Sapphire Coincidentally, Ferris was selected to become the queen of an immortal race of extraterrestrial women warriors, known as the Zamaron. However, Carol did not desire to leave Earth, because of her love for the Green Lantern. Desperate for a queen, the Zamaron brainwashed Ferris into thinking Green Lantern was her enemy. After she was defeated by the emerald warrior, the Zamaron deemed Ferris unworthy of leadership, thus removed her memory of being Star Sapphire, although they left behind both the gem and a subconscious knowledge of her powers. She travelled to Metropolis to retrieve the gem and became Star Sapphire once again. With her powers, she made Superman her slave, as she believed he had killed Green Lantern. She was eventually defeated and after learning Green Lantern was alive, her personality returned back to Carol Ferris, but she kept the gem. Predator When Carol Ferris was cured of her evil Star Sapphire persona, she developed a third subconscious identity, the male "Predator". Finally, the Predator started to court Carol who did not know that the Predator was a part of herself and battled Hal Jordan for her love. Hal defeated the Predator and witnessed him merging with Carol into Star Sapphire. Later, the Predator reappeared and revealed that he was actually an ancient parasite from the planet Maltus. With Jordan powerless, the Predator transformed Carol into a totally evil incarnation of Star Sapphire who eventually murdered Katma Tui, and he impregnated Star Sapphire with a demonic entity. Soon, both the Predator and Star Sapphire were completely separated from Carol, and Star Sapphire actually gave birth to the child. Shortly afterwards, the parents Predator and Star Sapphire were killed by Neron, who departed with their baby in his arms. Hal as the Spectre decides to visit Carol. He reaches into Carol and pulls out the Star Sapphire gem, which causes Star Sapphire herself to re-emerge it appeared she was previously killed by Neron, but somehow a part of her survived in Carol. The Spectre detains Star Sapphire and puts her back into the gem. He hands the gem to Carol and lets her smash the gem essentially finally killing the Star Sapphire persona that would take control of her, and she starts feeling much better. As Hal reaches a crossroads in his time as the Spectre, he further tries to help Carol. However, at the same time, Hal learns that his actions as Parallax were caused by a demonic parasite of the same name, which was the source of the old Yellow Impurity in the rings. Afterwards, Carol Ferris asks Hal whether he remembers anything from when he was the Spectre. Hal says he remembers it as if he were watching it from the outside. Hal apologizes for everything Carol had to go through. Carol says that she can use a good pilot. Hal says that he appreciates the offer, but he has other plans. Carol managed to learn some of the truth about the Zamaron, such as how the Star Sapphire is a conduit for the emotional energies of love. Hal tries to talk with Carol about what happened, but she quickly leaves to avoid an awkward scene. The following day, Hal talked with his old friend Tom Kalmaku, and learned that Carol recently got divorced. Following the announcement that Sinestro was going to be executed, Hal went to talk to Carol as she was flying a plane. As Hal explained what Sinestro had done and how close they had once been, Carol commented that he sounded like he needed justification, and gave it to him, reminding Hal that Sinestro was the one who put Parallax inside him. While flying, a Star Sapphire Ring broke through the cockpit and attached itself to her. Carol soon left for Zamaron to be inducted into the Star Sapphire Corps. Although she initially declined to become a member of the Star Sapphire Corps, she later accepted the ring when she was informed about the Blackest

Night and that Hal was suppose to die. She was seen battling Sinestro, before joining forces with him, Hal, and Indigo They called themselves the New Guardians. After they recharged their rings they went to Coast City fight Nekron and the black lanterns. After a foiled attempt to combine the light of her Power Ring with the six lights coming from the other Corps-Leaders makes Nekron able to possess resurrected heroes, Ganthet forces a secret protocol in her ring, forcing Carol to seek for a deputy. The Lanterns are then attacked by the Black Lantern Spectre. Carol tries to stop Hal, but he refuses to be swayed. Carol kisses Hal, telling him "I love you", before Hal allows Parallax to possess him. Nekron is defeated afterwards with the help of the Entity. Brightest Day Carol wants to talk to Hal about their relationship, but Sinestro interrupts their talk by crashing their planes. The three visit the White Lantern to see if any of them can lift it. Later, she is sent to Las Vegas to retrieve the Predator. She finds that the Predator has possessed a man who is obsessed with a young woman to the point of stalking her. She kisses him to make him feel loved so she can free him of the entity. After that Carol and Hal are taken to Zamaron. Later, Queen Khea opened a portal from Hawkworld to Zamaron. As she started an invasion on Zamaron with her menhawks, they are approached by Carol and the Predator. Carol battles the Hawk family Hawkman and Hawkgirl to a stand still while trying not to destroy the universe. She is saved by Hawkman and Hawkgirl. She then tells Hawkman the reason is because they have a great love, one greater then she and Hal Jordan could ever have. Afterward Carol arrives, and tells Hal and the others what happened on Hawkworld. Krona and the Emotional Entities are nowhere to be found but the group does come upon the Book of the Black. Hal escapes with the rings of the New Guardians. After Hal defeats Krona, killing him in the process, Sinestro is inducted into the Corp and Hal is stripped of his ring and sent back to Earth.

Chapter 5 : Sapphire Connoisseurship | Judging Sapphire

The Secret Life Of Star Sapphire! released by DC Comics on June 1, Summary. The Cheetah's Thought Prisoners. The Maid of Menace! (reprinted from Action Comics #).

Garlic and Sapphires was not only a disappointment, it was as if a completely different person had written it. It is ironic that in a book about disguises, Reichl herself was unrecognizable. Far from the funny, sensitive, and sincere person she was in her first book, Reichl had transformed herself into a self-absorbed snob loaded with enough hypocrisy to sink a ship. Part of her mission is to expose the poor treatment many of these restaurants heap on the "common man. Although this obviously has no bearing on the quality of the food, it has a great deal of bearing on the quality of the experience. Personally, I eat for the food. The idea is cute, and for the first few chapters it was fun. But Reichl shows her true colors right from the start when she heaps disdain on a bearded ignoramus wearing Birkenstocks Reichl then reminisces about her trip to Japan, in which she is first exposed to the proper way to eat Japanese food. She assumes that a "loud, brassy blonde," who is disturbing her expensive meal, is a prostitute. She comes up with histories for each of the women she invents, and, with just a wig and some makeup, is so amazingly convincing that she can even fool her husband! Either Reichl is schizophrenic, or she takes method acting entirely too seriously. She certainly takes herself too seriously. If the book had been well written I could have forgiven the snobbery, but, with the exception of one chapter, "The Missionary of the Delicious," in which Reichl was somehow able to get a grip on herself, purple prose abounded. As her editor I would have crossed out half of her adjectives. The inclusion of reprints of her published reviews was redundant, and the recipes were mediocre. There was no clue in these recipes that Reichl was an expert in the kitchen. But, hey, she was writing for the "huddled masses yearning to eat free. She loves food, and she has dined in some truly fabulous restaurants. She had a duty to go to these marvelous places, enjoy herself to the max, and then take the rest of us with her.

Chapter 6 : Garlic and Sapphires: The Secret Life of a Critic in Disguise by Ruth Reichl

Garlic and Sapphires: The Secret Life of A Critic In Disguise was published in It might have been a bit more relevant at that time but it's message about the love of good food, told with insight and humor is timeless.

Hughes My love, she comes in colors. Arthur Lee, Love The appraisal of precious stones is an eclectic skill, not for the timid or shameless, for such decisions involve both conscious and unconscious action. Try as we may to slice, dice and pigeon-hole elements of quality, in the end an analysis requires more than just a formula, just as fine cooking involves not simply ingredients and a recipe. It is about reaching for factors beyond the immediate senses, and in that respect is quite like enjoyment of fine art, food and music. Thus, what I will try to convey to you in the following passages is educated emotion, something to help separate the long, languid lines of artistic truth from aimless noodling. Here you will find the ingredients, the recipe, the score. But without the passion that only the viewer himself can bring, both these gems and our time on this precious planet are a waste. With that introduction, let us now examine blue sapphires. Here I have a confession to make. Blue is my favorite color. Thus the following essay is one of love. Kashmir " Blue Velvet This fair dame is placed upon a higher pedestal than all others, only to have it ripped out by every Tom, Dick and Malagasy. First, let me let you in on a base little secret. But these were the halcyon days! If one factors in the brief three-month summer mining periods, within less than thirty months, this tiny land slip high in the Indian Himalaya attained a reputation that has left the world mumbling ever since about having seen the light. What is it about the Kashmir stone that I find most attractive? I suppose it is staying power. Plenty of sapphires look magnificent under one light, but when brought into another, shed their beauty faster than a K-Mart daisy. Not so for these gems from the mighty Himalaya. John McLean ; Gem: Pala International What else do I like? I like their texture, that softness that envelopes all like a sticky blue blanket, banishing darkness with that bluest of blues. To get hypertechnical, we can call it a removal of extinction, a scattering of light off the extremely fine silk, which is just enough to exile the night, but not enough to materially affect transparency. Note that here we have a direct contradiction of the laws of diamond grading " here we have inclusions contributing in a major way to the beauty of a gem. Do you take me for a fool? A good lover accepts the defects as the price of admission. They are nothing but the flaws in a fine leather, a blown note betwixt the sweet sheets of a Coltrane sonic masterpiece. Mogok " Round about midnight Blue midnight. The blue of the finest Mogok stone is something beyond vivid, beyond intense, into a realm where blue, black and lust intermingle. But black is perhaps too strong a word, for there is nothing black about a Mogok blue. To visualize this, think of the color of a desert sky about 15 minutes after the sun has set, with stars rising in the distance. This is the color " an intense azure hue matched in the world of gems only by the finest tanzanites ten carats plus here. Does all of the Mogok stone display this color? There are Mogok blues that entirely resemble the lightest of Ceylon sapphires. So understand that we are talking about ideals here. Cracks, fractures, fissures, faults, label them as you may. Many Mogok stones are cursed by these destabilizing distractions. Pox on cracks, and the curse they rode in on. Some Mogok blues are so very intense that they suffocate. But even these are still interesting in the proper light. Adisorn Studio, Bangkok Ceylon " Snap to it Dame Ceylon, what you have been through, how your fair name has been besmirched. So many look down upon you. The nay-sayers are nothing but novices, those still waiting to have their minds blown by your unique take on the blues. For when you are in your prime, you are the equal of any. Let me say it again " the finest stones from Serendib can blow with any blues on the bandstand. It slashes the eye like a razor, similar to a cobaltian blue of the finest Lanka spinels. Incidentally, this is also true for gems from Kashmir, which bear a far greater resemblance to those from Ceylon than to Mogok blues. Both Sri Lankan and Kashmir stones suffer from a tendency towards depth down below. Due to the shape of the rough, fashioning the biggest stones is often an exercise in butt padding. Zoning is also a problem. This is, of course, apropos in the evaluation of any gem, but of utmost importance where zoning is a problem. Pay particular attention to areas where the color might wash out. Pala International The perfect sapphire A fine gem has an unmistakable sexual quality to it. This should come as no surprise. Both subjects involve a good measure of passion. But the finest gems are like the finest people. Their beauty grows with time. Some sapphires drive you crazy the moment their azure legs slither from a stone paper, leaping onto the cocktail table and saying: But there is a difference between love and lust, the subtle versus animal desire. Each has its moments. But in lovers, as with gems, I look for staying power, those which combine the cerebral with the physical. For the physical alone is not enough. The beauty of love is its sublime, understated nature. It offers you a glass of wine and conversation, before suggesting at the end of the evening that the two of you retire to the boudoir just for friendship, of course. In my experience, such attraction is an emotion that develops with time. Exceptional gems grow on you. They are experts at hiding, more interesting with every listen, more exciting with each glimpse. When you gaze at their beauty for hours, days, weeks, years on end without tiring you know you have a fine gem. That, my friends, is what I call love. This takes distance, the kind that only time provides. So the next time you are taken aback by a gem, stop yourself. You may be looking at infatuation. Stand back and judge. And just what, pray tell, would the perfect sapphire look like? My dear friends, that would be akin to finding the perfect woman or man. Pala International Original sin First, let me say that there is a definite market ranking for sapphire according to origin. It unfolds as follows: Kashmir Ceylon Everything else That said, I would like to be allowed to burst all your bubbles. Permit me to relate the following story. The stones from this mine bore such a resemblance to those of Kashmir that many labs actually issued papers certifying Kashmir as the source. For what good is it? Back in the good old days, origin was based not on where a stone came out of the ground, for there was no sure way of proving the geography of a stone, but on the appearance of a stone relative to the typical appearance of stones from certain classic sources. Thus a Ceylon sapphire that looked like a Kashmir stone, became, de facto, a "Kashmir" sapphire in the market. Similarly, the Mogok stone that resembled a Ceylon, became a Ceylon. Sadly, origin is today determined largely by invisible scientific criteria, as opposed to obvious physical attributes. Rather than biting the bullet and devising the means of judging aesthetic beauty or admitting that it is beyond reach, laboratories are today handing us the ultimate silliness, a forehead-angle measurement of intelligence. If asked to judge a Miss Universe pageant, many gemologists would probably make the determination based on a DNA signature. But what can I say? We are often confronted with ridiculous laws. In West Virginia, it is legal to beat your wife so long as it is done in public on Sunday on the courthouse steps, while in Denver, it is against the law to lend your neighbor a vacuum cleaner. Yes, these are the laws of the land " but there are clearly cases that call for a little civil disobedience. Thus one may make use of origin reports, but use them only as a guide, not for a final determination of the merits of a fine gem. Dare to disagree when common sense dictates it. Personally examine the ballots when necessary. Starry, starry night A short time ago I had the opportunity to view a particularly fine sapphire. Its actual origin, I will not say " for that prejudice would simply detract from its magnificent beauty, manifest to all which view gems with heart, rather than magnifier, in hand. Ilke Bahn, our goldsmith at Pala International, had just finished placing this jewel in a handmade mounting. And this mounting only served to enhance the beauty of an already stunning gem. Ilke handed the azure beauty to me to with a gleam in her eye " the secret of the night sky palmed to an innocent.

When the Zamaron discovered that she was in love with Green Lantern, a servant of their estranged friends, the Guardians of the Universe , they sent her to defeat Green Lantern in battle as Star Sapphire. Over the years, Star Sapphire and Green Lantern would duel again and again, but each time Jordan would defeat Ferris and revert her to normal. Jordan and Ferris separate when Carol is engaged to Jason Belmore; later she is confined to a wheelchair. Finally, the Predator started to court Carol who did not know that the Predator was a part of herself and battled Hal Jordan for her love. Hal defeated the Predator and witnessed him merging with Carol into Star Sapphire. Now fully evil, Carol took over ruling Zamaron but her reign was short; the Zamarons, following the Crisis on Infinite Earths, abandoned their queen and their homeworld to live in another dimension with their male counterparts, the Guardians of the Universe. Carol was furious and vowed revenge on Hal and the Green Lantern Corps. After several battles, Carol found her chance to hurt her ex-lover and murdered Katma Tui , whose power ring had been rendered inert following the destruction of the main power battery on Oa. In the third Green Lantern series, the nature of the Predator entity was retconned as being a parasite creature from the planet Maltus and that the entity had corrupted Carol and was responsible for making her murder Katma. The Green Lantern Corps purged Carol of the entity, saving her life in the process. Instead, Carol opted to stay with her mother and find her own path. However, Carol would not be gone from the world of super-heroism for long. Shortly after giving birth to their child, Neron appeared and offered to purge her of these two entities. Carol agreed, and then watched as the now separate entities Predator and Star Sapphire were killed by Neron, who departed with their baby in his arms. Extreme Justice Ultimately though, the events of Infinite Crisis effectively wiped out the above-mentioned stories. However, the Sapphire had found a new, unnamed host, and that it was this new Star Sapphire that murdered Katma Tui. He makes himself visible and tells Carol he is going to help her, but that she will not remember his visit. He reaches into Carol and pulls out the Star Sapphire gem, which causes Star Sapphire herself to re-emerge it appeared she was previously killed by Neron, but somehow a part of her survived in Carol. The Spectre detains Star Sapphire and puts her back into the gem. He hands the gem to Carol and lets her finish the job, which she does essentially finally killing the Star Sapphire persona that would take control of her , and starts feeling much better. Rebirth 6, Hal and Carol finally come to terms with their relationship. In Northern California at Ferris Aircraft, Carol Ferris is reminiscing over her former life when a mysterious power revitalises and reforms the abandoned, condemned fields. Hal Jordan, using his powers as the Spectre, appears. She asks Hal whether he remembers anything from when he was the Spectre. Hal says he remembers it as if he were watching it from the outside. How Spectre thinks, and who he talked to beyond this life, Hal cannot recall. Hal apologizes for everything Carol had to go through. Carol says she survived and that she is not going to sell the airbase. She says that if Hal can rebuild his life, so can she, and that she is going to do so with her husband, Gil. Carol says that she can use a good pilot. Hal says that he appreciates the offer, but he has other plans. Tales of the Corps miniseries sheds light on the exchange between Carol and the violet ring sent to her. The ring reveals that all those chosen to wield the violet light must accept it willingly this appears to overcome the controlling aspect of the violet light. The ring tells Carol that she has a hole in her heart but Carol continues to deny it. The ring tells Carol that she has continually put aside her own happiness for the benefit of others. Because she is capable of doing this, Carol could become the most powerful Star Sapphire in the universe and that the Zamarons recognized this and sent her the ring with the intention of having Carol lead the entire Star Sapphire army into battle alongside the Green Lantern Corps. Carol still refuses to accept the ring, but the ring shows her a vision of the War of Light and indicates that Hal Jordan will not survive and tells her that by accepting the ring, she can save him. Then she takes on Sinestro who says that he has never held ill will toward Carol and wonders why she is doing this for a man who has never truly given his heart toward her. The two engage in a fight and are equally matched until Carol attempts to encase him in one of the brainwashing crystals that the Zamaron use to "recruit" new followers. Sinestro lashes out after witnessing a vision of Arin Sur, his former love, blasting Carol across the battlefield where she was subdued by two other Yellow Lanterns and Sinestro himself. However, before he could capitalise on the advantage, the Black Lanterns invade, led by Amon Sur, shocking both Carol and Sinestro. Carol tries to stop Hal, but he refuses to be swayed. Carol kisses Hal, telling him "I love you", before Hal allows Parallax to possess him. She frees him from the Predator by kissing him. After that, Carol and Hal are taken to Zamaron. The Queen gives her life to sustain the central power battery and gives her title to Carol Ferris. As she started an invasion on Zamaron with her manhawks, they are approached by Carol and the Predator. She then tells Hawkman the reason is that the couple have a great love, a greater love than she and Hal Jordan could ever have. After Krona is killed by Hal, she reclaims the violet ring of the Zamarons. When Hal is stripped of his ring, she returns with him to Earth. Carol offers Hal a job at Ferris Aircraft, but not as a pilot because of insurance issues. Hal asks her out to dinner and Carol thinks he is going to propose. When he does not, she walks out on him and drives away, leaving him without a ride. When Carol demands to know where Hal is, Sinestro states that Hal is dead, but Carol refuses to believe him and attacks. When Kyle splits the White Lantern ring into seven after realizing that the power is too great for him to control on his own, he chooses Carol as one of the six new members of the White Lantern Corps; however, she decides to keep her violet ring. Moreover, the Sapphire bestows upon her a certain amount of invulnerability and allows her to survive in airless space. During this, Carol was clad in a version of her Sapphire uniform, but with Green Lantern design. Carol now wields a less powerful violet power ring as a member of the Star Sapphires, which replicates her original powers as Star Sapphire to a degree as well. Upon their return to America, Carol thinks Hal is not living up to his potential. Afterward, Carol is angry at Hal for taking a mission for the U. Hal refuses; however, she goes anyway. Afterward, Carol returns to Coast City, where Thomas Kalmaku gives her a note saying that Hal was too afraid to say that he had always loved her. Carol sees the engagement ring that he was going to propose to her with. Hal, however, is ungrateful and uses his ring to knock Guy away and take Carol. This leads Ganthet to strip Hal of his ring, leaving him and Carol to plummet. Sinestro offers Hal a yellow ring for a replacement, and Hal reluctantly takes it to save Carol. Although Leonard McCoy "the chosen wielder of the Indigo ring" is able to confirm that Walker will recover, Carol reveals to Hal that Nekron has been drawn into their new universe as well. Carol appears in issue 11 of the Young Justice tie-in comic book series. She is initially repelled by the idea of working with "common criminals" but seems to warm to the amount of money that Luthor promises each of them something that keeps her from quitting after their initial plan fails. While aligned with this team, she successfully tricks Wonder Woman and Hawkgirl into believing that she still wants to live in a world with men, luring them into a trap that subdues both them and Hippolyta. During the battle, she is struck unconscious by a beam from an Apokoliptan cannon, but is saved from falling to her death by Shining Knight. She is last seen fleeing the Metro Tower along with the other surviving members of the Secret Society. Although she appears in both her human and Star Sapphire forms, she is unaware of her transformations. Star Sapphire ultimately attempts to open a portal that allows an army of Zamarons to invade Earth but the invasion is repelled by Jordan and Batman. The Animated Series, voiced by Jennifer Hale. There she discovers that Hal Jordan is Green Lantern. Carol is furious when she believes he is with another girl while she thought he was dead and attacks him. In the end, Hal gets through to her and she relinquishes the ring and its power another Star Sapphire states she is the first to do so. The Zamarons allow her to go home and she reluctantly parts from Hal after telling him to do what he needs to do and come back to her. They are briefly reunited in the episode "Homecoming", when the Star Sapphires have managed to send Hal to her as a shortcut to Oa. He is amnesiac at first; once she restores his memory, he goes to Oa. The episode ends with her looking at him returning in the sky. In the next episode, she decides to end their relationship due to the difficulties caused by his duties. In the episode "Love is a Battlefield", she had to fight Atrocitus to prove love is a great emotion. At the end of the episode, she renews her relationship with Hal. In addition, she decides to keep the ring this time just in case. Carol Ferris appears in the Young Justice: Invasion episode "Depths", voiced by Kari Wahlgren. She oversees the launch of a satellite designed by Ferris Aircraft to open up relations between Earth and Mars. The shuttle is destroyed by Black Manta after Aqualad led a failed attempt to stop it from launching. In the Arrow episode "Darkness at the Edge of Town" during a flashback, the civilian aircraft is from Ferris Airline which is owned by the Ferris Family. In the pilot episode of the Arrow spin-off, The Flash , S. Later in the episode "Who is Harrison Wells? On the welcome sign to the city, a picture of an airplane is depicted, and the sign reads "Home of Ferris Airlines. She appears as a student at Super Hero High. The New Frontier , voiced by Brooke Shields. This version does not have any superpowers although a Star Sapphire is shown in full costume at the end of the film during U. She lures Jordan into a mine by taking the workers hostage using a group of radicals called the "Identity Brotherhood". Though Hal manages to rescue all the workers, Carol is killed by the leader of the radicals using a suicide bomb.

Chapter 8 : Carol Ferris - Wikipedia

Star Sapphire is the name of several fictional characters in DC Comics; many of them are villainous, and all connected in blog.quintoapp.com DC continuity, an immortal race of warrior women (the Zamarons) were depicted as having the ancient tradition of choosing physically identical mortals from across the cosmos to serve as the host body for their queen.

An unnamed villain with poorly-defined powers, she was the ruler of the 7th Dimension and sought to expand her territory by conquering Earth. She was later retroactively fit into Post-Crisis continuity as a former ruler of the Zamarons, but one who was rejected as being unfit to rule due to her fear of men and was exiled from our reality. The Brave and the Bold 6; March However, in Green Lantern 16 October, Ferris was approached by the Zamarons, who had chosen her to become their latest Zamaronian queen. To that end, they hypnotized her, outfitted her in the traditional hunting uniform of a Zamaronian queen, gave her the star sapphire power gem, and told her to go out and battle Green Lantern to prove her superiority. Compelled to obey due to the hypnotism of the Zamaronian pipe organ, Ferris now acting as an aggressive Zamaron warrior attacked Hal Jordan in an attempt to prove herself worthy of becoming queen. However, following an initial victory, Star Sapphire lost her second bout with Jordan, and the Zamarons stripped away her memories of Star Sapphire and returned her to normal. Shortly after this there was a third Star Sapphire named Dela Pharon, who made her debut in Green Lantern 41 [November], but she disappeared into the background following her initial appearance. During her periodic transformations into Star Sapphire, Carol Ferris used her time to try and get Green Lantern to marry her see here but, as time wore on, she became increasingly ruthless in the pursuit of her beloved. However, this situation began to change when Carol—who had previously forgotten her activities as Star Sapphire once she had changed back to normal—was informed of her second identity by Hal Jordan, who also revealed his secret identity to her. Now suffering from multiple-personality disorder, her situation would grow worse as a series of crises struck her life. It began when Congressman Jason Bloch tried to ruin Ferris Aircraft financially in an attempt to buy it out, forcing her father out of retirement to take back the presidency of his company from his daughter. This, coupled with Hal Jordan being forced to take an extended leave of absence from Earth, led to Carol Ferris suffering a nervous breakdown. Deprived of both love and success, she believed herself to be unworthy of either because she was not ruthless enough. This psychological imbalance triggered her power gem, which split her into two separate beings: In addition, the Predator established his own company, Intercontinental Petroleum or Con-Trol, to help Carol regain control of Ferris Aircraft, all in a subconscious bid to prove herself to her father. Soon he began to court Carol who did not know that the Predator was part of herself directly, which eventually led to the Predator battling a newly-returned Jordan for her hand. In the end, Green Lantern defeated the vigilante and witnessed him re-merging with Carol Ferris to become a newer, more dangerous, Star Sapphire see here. A singular being once more, Star Sapphire was now ready to take her throne as the queen of Zamaron and to take Green Lantern as her consort, but Hal refused, claiming that she was nothing but a heartless creation of the Zamarons. Enraged, she vowed revenge, and eventually killed Corps member Katma Tui as part of one of her schemes. However, her efforts proved futile, as the Zamarons and the Guardians reconciled and departed this reality during the Millennium crossover event, leaving Star Sapphire the queen of an abandoned country. However, even after murdering his friend, Hal Jordan did not give up on her, but an attempt to cleanse her of her evil persona proved futile. Following the attempt she claimed that she was, in fact, the real Carol Ferris, and that the change in her personality was the end result of the events that had shaped her life this was, of course, the Star Sapphire persona talking. Still not cowed, Hal Jordan would have tried again, but he was nonetheless distracted when he went mad, destroyed the Green Lantern Corps, and became Parallax, leaving his former love—who was rapidly losing the war for her sanity—to fend for herself. Neron gladly did so, first transforming Star Sapphire seen here in her new costume and the Predator into separate corporal beings and then allowing them to cause some havoc before destroying them both. However, while she was free of her unwanted pregnancy and the multiple personalities in her head, she still possessed a residual element of her Star Sapphire persona in her subconscious. Fortunately, Hal Jordan, who was now the new Spectre, succeeded in removing those last lingering vestiges from her mind, allowing her "after years of torment" to finally be free. In the end Carol Ferris, having moved on, married a man named Gil no doubt a tribute to Gil Kane, co-creator of the Carol Ferris Star Sapphire and dropped off the radar for a few years, resurfacing in the recent Green Lantern: Rebirth miniseries where, having come to terms with her feelings for the newly-resurrected Hal Jordan, she now seeks to rebuild Ferris Aircraft and start over. Noteworthy for speaking with a French accent that came and went from story to story, this incarnation of the character appeared with the supervillain team for the duration of its run, and apparently developed feelings for undercover hero Captain Comet along the way. Because of this elaborate, sometimes contradictory, back-history, the creative team has decided to pretty much ignore it altogether, preferring to utilize Star Sapphire as simply a "gal who has this special power," as Bruce Timm so eloquently put it. Rebirth 6; May ? Also, who is this version of Star Sapphire? In past interviews recorded above the creative team has made mention of her being Carol Ferris, but it is unlikely as Hal Jordan, her adversary and reason for existence, is not present on this series his cameo appearance in "The Once and Future Thing" notwithstanding. It is more likely that this Star Sapphire is Remoni-Notra, considering that 1 the Star Sapphire on Justice League was a member of a group of supervillains, and 2 this Star Sapphire is interested in theft, rather than making a Green Lantern fall in love with her. Still, her true identity is unknown, and will remain so unless her origins are delved into in a future episode of Justice League Unlimited. As a result, her bit of dialogue from "Injustice for All" about associating with common criminals reprinted above becomes quite ironic, as "without that added depth" this femme fatale is now little more than a common criminal herself.

Chapter 9 : Wonder Woman Joins the Star Sapphires Again, Gets a New Costume

The star sapphire reflects light, showing a glittering star with six points. These special stones possess the deep blue color of the finest sapphire. The gray, blue-gray, and white "star" sapphires frequently show a more distinct star.
