Houghton Mifflin Harcourt Format Available: You have to read these poems. These poems evoke so much strength, beauty, passion, fear. The stylistic range of these poems, the wit, and the intelligence of them offers so much to be admired. There is nothing silent about Silencer. What an outstanding second book from Marcus Wicker. He writes the kinds of vital, clear-eyed poems we can turn to when codeswitching slogans and online power fists no longer get the job done. These are poems whose ink is made from anger and quarter notes. They remind us that to remain silent in the face of aggression is to be complicit and to be complicit is not an option for any of us. Politics and social realities aside, this is foremost a book that delights in language, how it sounds to the ear and plays to the mind. We have suburban complacency played against hip-hop resistance, Christian prayers uttered in the face of dread violence, real meaning pitted against materialism, and love, in its largest measure, set against ignorance. To say Silencer is a tour de force would be an understatement. What a work of true art this is, and what a gift Marcus Wicker has given to us. Here in these pages, sailfish and hummingbirds assert their frenetic movements on a planet simmering with racial tensions, which in turn forms its own kind of bopping and buoyant religion. What a thrill to read these poems that provoke and beg for beauty and song-calling into the darkest of nights. How could it be? It is a place where we are seen: Hall Earl Hammond, the wealthy patriarch of a family of ranchers, lies dead, shot just as he was to donate his Coquina Ranch to the state to preserve it from developers. Spearheading the plan to save this environmental treasure was Thorn, a reluctant heir to a secret family fortune, who now finds himself in terrible danger as well. A pair of deviant brothers, both contract killers, kidnap him and drags him to a game preserve, surrounded by herds of exotic and very dangerous animals. He is entrapped in a sinkhole—a geological dungeon from which there is no escape. He suspects the crimes are related. Silencer pits brother against brother and wife against husband in a thriller that proves once again that James Hall is "the king of the Florida-gothic noir" Dennis Lehane.

View Photos Last Thursday the Architectural League hosted the third in a series of lectures from the recipients of the Emerging Voices program. Selected for the promise they have shown in forging unique paths in architecture, the eight firms will be presenting lectures on their personal philosophies each Thursday this month. The firm has been lucky enough to realize a wide range of projects, from institutional to private to the slightly bizarre. Sourced wood from a nearby barn helped to create a modern yet rustic space. Unkefer says the "improvisational spirit of the project took it from static to something inspirational. A view inside the Parallax pavilion. Geometric beams overhead bring interest to the simple structure. Philadelphia Naval Yard, Another left-of-center project DIGSAU undertook involved a secondary home for a client whose primary residence is an earthship a passive house made of recycled materials prone to flooding from the nearby river. The alternate home will serve as a sanctuary on rainy days. Photo by John Egly-Russell. Visiting the site, the firm noticed buildings dwarfed by the huge ghost ships no longer in use. Rather than mimicking architectural elements from these remnants, they used the building as a study in glass to help them stand out against the intimidating backdrop. A mismatched scattering of abstracted windows on the south end completes the cool exterior. Indoors, the firm balanced the shell with warm locally sourced materials. A new master plan will increase beer making capacity while creating a destination for fans of the left-of-center beer brewer. Seen here is an office addition completed in Ogrydziak Prillinger Architects approach projects with an eye towards research and the prospect for experimentation. The duo creates buildings with casual gestures while simultaneously exploring the utilization of space through geometric methods a not-so-casual process. These research explorations take shape under two reoccurring themes: While the "inconsistency" projects delve into the potential for freedom, "relaxation" undertakings explore variations of looseness. Rendering of the the proposed Floating House, A pedestrian path parallels the pipeline that takes beer on its journey from the building it is made in to the one where it is bottled. Estimated completion April For the construction of an exhibition space in San Francisco, OPA merged three reclaimed shipping containers to form a triangular tunnel. An inefficient configuration of the containers maximizes the perimeter of the building. The open space left at the center creates a skylight and atrium suitable for the presentation of sculpture. The structure, dubbed Trikselion, was designed to leave as little impact on the site as possible; the containers are removable and can thus be reinstalled elsewhere. The Conway House consists of a bounty of the same three-dimensional tile repeated in a chain as dictated by its shape. The biprism tiles become so interlinked their individuality is lost in the resulting form. OPA used perspective distortion to create the aptly named Parallax. A pavilion consisting of a box-like structure on the site, nearby vanishing points were located. At various locations on the site, one views the structure as larger or smaller than its actual size. Prillinger describes this visual manipulation as "deceptively simple. OPA wanted to free themselves from logic imposed by a grid and considered various inefficient configurations of shipping containers. They settled on a combination of options, seen in the trikselion shape here. The Presidio, San Francisco, California. Mobile exhibition pavilion for the For-Site Foundation. Honighaus allowed another opportunity for OPA to visually toy with the visitor, but in a very different way. A crumpled geometric roofline and a modified entry insinuate a modern center bubbling within, a theme carried on throughout the common spaces. Much of the existing rooms maintained their traditional style, providing further contrast to keep those passing through the space on their toes. The geometric interior seen here offers a stark contrast to the exterior of an Edwardian home in the historical Pacific Heights section of San Francisco.
