The Time of the Buffalo is recommended for readers of environmental history, American history enthusiasts, and wildlife lovers in general. [Note: The names buffalo and American bison are used interchangeably.]

Banteng , gaur , and gayal However, Y chromosome analysis associated wisent and American bison. Steele and Company The steppe bison Bison priscus diverged from the lineage that led to cattle Bos taurus about 2 to 5 million years ago. The bison genus is clearly in the fossil record by 2 million years ago. The European bison arose from the steppe bison, without fossil evidence of other ancestral species between the steppe bison and the European bison, though the European bison might have arisen from the lineage that led to American bison if that lineage backcrossed with the steppe bison. Again, the web of relationships is confusing, but some evidence shows the European bison is descended from bison that had migrated from Asia to North America, and then back to Europe, where they crossbred with existing steppe bison. Evidence has been found of multiple crossings of bison to and from Asia starting before , years ago and continuing until at least , years ago. The steppe bison spread through the northern parts of North America and lived in Eurasia until roughly 11, years ago [32] and North America until 4, to 8, years ago. It is thought to have disappeared some 21,â€”30, years ago, during the late Wisconsin glaciation. During that period, a handful of ranchers gathered remnants of the existing herds to save the species from extinction. These ranchers bred some of the bison with cattle in an effort to produce "cattlo". Generally, male domestic bulls were crossed with buffalo cows, producing offspring of which only the females were fertile. The crossbred animals did not demonstrate any form of hybrid vigor , so the practice was abandoned. The proportion of cattle DNA that has been measured in introgressed individuals and bison herds today is typically quite low, ranging from 0. National Bison Association has adopted a code of ethics which prohibits its members from deliberately crossbreeding bison with any other species. Range and population[ edit ] Bison herd grazing at the National Bison Range in Montana Despite being the closest relatives of domestic cattle native to North America, bison were never domesticated by Native Americans. Later attempts of domestication by Europeans prior to the 20th century met with limited success. This agility and speed, combined with their great size and weight, makes bison herds difficult to confine, as they can easily escape or destroy most fencing systems, including most razor wire. About , bison currently exist on private lands and around 30, on public lands which includes environmental and government preserves. In , genetically pure bison were reintroduced to the Janos Biosphere Reserve in northern Chihuahua adding to the Mexican bison population. S Tribes and Canadian First Nations signed a treaty to help with the restoration of bison, the first to be signed in nearly years. They were invaluable to explorers and were adopted by pioneers. Bison traces were characteristically north and south, but several key east-west trails were used later as railways.

Chapter 2 : DONNA THE BUFFALO - ALL THE TIME LYRICS

The Time of the Buffalo by Tom McHugh (Knopf ) (). I recently became interested in the bison and its relation to the American Plains Indians after reading on Wikipedia that the US Army last fought the Apaches in when the Apaches crossed the Mexican border and carried out raids in Texas.

We have learned one place under scrutiny by federal investigators is Buffalo, New York. In August, information about dozens of accused priests was leaked from the diocesan secret archive. Tonight, you will hear from a priest who will share his direct knowledge about what he has called a cover-up. But first, the anonymous whistleblower who uncovered proof that Bishop Richard Malone withheld the names of dozens of priests accused of abuse. I had to rely on God even more than I ever have before. She is the whistleblower who leaked records from the secret archive of the Diocese of Buffalo. Last week she spoke with the FBI. Some people would say that you betrayed Bishop Malone. They revealed that for years Bishop Malone allowed priests accused of sexual assault such as statutory rape and groping to stay on the job. I love my church, I love our diocese, and I-- I loved him. I-- I genuinely did as my bishop and as my boss. So why are you doing this? The reality of what I saw really left me with no other option. At first, she took pictures with her phone. The documents provided an extraordinary window into how the diocese handled abuse. And nobody caught on to what you were doing? Her decision to act was influenced by the phone calls she fielded from dozens of people who said they had been abused. There was no other way you saw to handle this? Not with any expediency, no. Bishop Richard Malone Her doubts began in March. Bishop Malone had agreed to release a list of 42 priests accused of sexually abusing minors. There was also something else, a dossier about priests she discovered in a supply closet. There was one particular binder, which was of pending litigation that had been presented to Bishop Malone when he first was installed as our bishop. And this was from the lawyers. And I remember finding this obviously very important and sensitive information and thinking, "How did it ever end up here, first of all? The cases in the dossier Bishop Malone inherited when he arrived in stretched back decades. As they worked on the list, the bishop and his lawyers decided they would not reveal the names of accused priests still in ministry. It was a very carefully curated list. And I-- I saw all the-- the lawyers coming in and out, and I was aware of the-- the various strategies that were in place. What were they trying to do if not help the victims? Church records showed two young men in Buffalo had complained in that Smith had inappropriately touched them. Two years before that, Smith was sent to counseling after repeated contact with an eighth-grade boy that included unwanted attention and facebook messages. Despite what Bishop Malone knew, he endorsed Smith for a job as a cruise ship chaplain. The bishop wrote, "I am unaware of anything in his background which would render him unsuitable to work with minor children". Our previous bishop had removed him from ministry, so I always thought it was odd that Bishop Malone had reinstated him. When I explored his file more in-depth, that might have really been the moment when I knew that I had to do something with this information. Remember, the diocese list had 42 names. They had accusations against them, credible accusations. I felt that instead of being transparent, we were almost being the opposite or-- or half transparent. One of them was Father Fabian Maryanski. The diocese knew about it but a note in the file argued Maryanski should be excluded from the list of problem priests. It said, "We did not remove him from ministry despite full knowledge of the case, and so including him on list might require explanation. She was not alone. Father Bob Zilliox advised the bishop on church law, including abuse cases. He told us he was disgusted by how the cases he saw were handled. I think the hypocrisy, the lip service, you know, the, "Yes, Bob, I agree with you," and then I would walk out of an office and nothing would happen. It is exceedingly rare for a Catholic priest to risk challenging his bishop in public. A lot of cases should have been handled differently. A lot of cases probably should have gone to Rome at the time. How many of those priests should have been taken out of priesthood? I would argue at least eight or nine. How many of them still are in the priesthood here in Buffalo? All the guys that should have been removed from the priesthood are still priests. What do you think of that? The church is holy. Those are individuals in the church who are weak and who have made very bad decisions. Why is it, do you think, that the clergy fails to get this? Bishop Malone has the authority to strip Father Zilliox

of his duties for going public. But the priest told us he is motivated to speak out by more than the truth. He also is a victim of sexual abuse by a Buffalo priest. And so all of this has been very painful for me to see how our diocese, how other dioceses have handled this. How old were you when you were abused? I was a year-old boy. How did that experience affect you while you were watching how Bishop Malone was handling these cases? It was very difficult in a lot of different ways. But when I saw things take place the way they did, I sort of was conflicted within. I think as a victim, I have a bias, which is maybe not a healthy thing, but objectively I can-- I have no tolerance for any abuse. Paul Snyder Bill Whitaker: Bishop Malone has called this a crisis. You call it a scandal. So you pretend to grieve with me about the fire, but the problem is you caused it. Snyder showed us some of the notes and emails he has received since calling for the bishop to resign. They want to be part of the solution but they think this bishop is preventing that from occurring. This month, Snyder sent letters and documents to prominent bishops demanding an investigation. Why do you have faith that the bishops are going to handle this? And I want these cardinals and bishops to start putting their ass on the line and start protecting their people. Bishops hold supreme power in their diocese and answer only to the pope. Bishop Malone plans to be there. Bishop Malone at August Press Conference: The shepherd does not desert the flock at a difficult time. The bishop has made three public apologies and offered to sell his 11, square foot official residence to help compensate victims. Last week, he sent us a statement that said in part: It was only after this scandal broke in March, that he suspended 16 more for abuse. None have been kicked out of the priesthood. He has said he is sorry. Do you forgive him? I accept it and I forgive him, but actions speak louder than words. Show us these cases are being handled properly. Show us these priests are being removed. You would like for Bishop Malone to resign? Produced by Guy Campanile and Lucy Boyd. Associate producer, Dina Zingaro.

Later, the advent of other stars made this one diminish with time.
