If you have a covered area outside, take the children there. Talk to them about what is happening to the bugs, flowers, grass, walkway, trees, and other things that they can see. Talk about the wonderful rain and all the good things it does. If you do not have a covered area, sit by a window with one of two children and watch the rain. Something to Think About: The more senses involved in an activity, the easier it is to remember. When they watch the rain, they can move their fingers up and down like the rain. A host of costumed animals combined with a merry bunch of children make this a delightful book. The rhyming story is perfect for an action-packed story time any time the book is read. The illustrations are so realistic and lively they almost jump off the page. Language Secret Surprise Materials: A surprise such as a small toddler-safe toy or a silly picture of a costumed animal Activity: See if the child can whisper also. Play recorded music and read the book, letting the child act out the motions to the music. The more children participating in this, the more fun. Toddlers love demonstrating their new physical skills. And they also love being active and being silly. This is a rather long action story so you may need to read only a few pages at one sitting. Take your cues from the group who is listening to the story. Be alert to their interest in the story.
