Team Working In order to meet this core competency, you will need to be able to develop strong working relationships, both inside and outside of the team. As a police officer you must focus on the customer. The customer is essentially the members of the public with whom you will be dealing. The only way that you can provide a high quality service to the public is by understanding the individual needs of your community. Police officers must be able to communicate both verbally and in writing. You will also need to communicate to the people you are addressing in a style and manner that is appropriate and professional. Therefore, the police force that you are applying to join will want to assess your potential in this area during the written tests of the selection process.

Problem Solving In order to solve problems effectively, you will first need to gather sufficient information. This can usually be achieved through a number of sources. For example, if you were investigating a burglary, you would first want to gather witness statements from the owner of the property, as well as the owners of any surrounding properties. This information may then lead to other information sources; which will allow you to gather sufficient evidence in order to make decisions that will ultimately lead to the problem being solved through effective decision-making.

Personal Responsibility Police officers have a reputation for solving problems and completing their assigned tasks. They are very good at taking personal responsibility for making things happen and achieving results. In order to effectively achieve this, you will need to display a level of motivation, commitment, perseverance and conscientiousness. As a police officer, you will often face difficult and pressurised circumstances. It is during these tough situations that you will need to show resilience. For example, imagine turning up to a call where a group of drunken lads are refusing to leave a pub after closing time. How would you deal with the situation?
