The human brain is an odd, glitchy machine that is influenced in all sorts of weird ways you never thought of. This is why politicians and salespeople can trick you into going along with them, just by toying with the words they use. Science is just now catching up to them, and has found that Say it enough, and people will believe it. For example, how many of you think Al Gore claims to have invented the Internet? He said no such thing -- but pundits and comedians repeated it enough that it became truth. In fact, studies have found that if just one person repeats the same opinion three times, it has a whopping 90 percent chance of converting three different people in the group to have the same opinion. A study on the phenomenon exposed one group to an opinion repeated by three different people, another to that same opinion repeated by one person multiple times. Incredibly, the group subjected to one single guy repeating the opinion was three times more susceptible to changing their own opinions than the others. Yeah, that whole "Hitler" thing is starting to make a lot more sense, right? You can bring people to your side -- and get them to do things for you -- just by imitating them.

Continue Reading Below Advertisement Much of France was ruled by parrots until , when peasants learned how to stick their fingers in their ears. It comes up in study after study -- the power of mimicry in social situations. Humans are social animals, and we all have a switch that flips in our brain that says, "This person is like me, therefore I should help them. So in the Dutch study mentioned above that explored the relationship between mimicry and generous tips, they first went into a restaurant and calculated an average tip, then told the server to repeat what half of her customers said after ordering, exactly as they said it. The tips from mimicked customers were a whopping 68 percent more generous than those from the non-mimicked ones. Regardless of factors like the accuracy of the order and wait time, just hearing their words repeated back to them put them in a more positive, giving state of mind. You can test it by following people around the office, parroting their every sentence, and log how much time passes before they finally turn around and stab you. Researchers did a study where participants were asked to respond with either statement when asked to consider whether they would like an unhealthy snack. They then reported how empowered they felt after and, in the true test, were offered a chocolate bar or a granola bar on the way out the door. In other words, one phrase is empowering, while the other "inherently signifies deprivation. Mutter "Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers" three times under your breath while grinning widely and eyeballing the couple at the next table.

Search Bigg Boss After eviction, Urvashi Vani calls Deepak Thakur her biggest enemy The evicted Bigg Boss contestant Urvashi Vani spoke about friend-turned-foe Deepak, his liking for Somi Khan and Sreesanth - her newfound brother in an exclusive interview. Nov 05, Urvashi Vani , a soft-spoken girl from Bihar, is the latest contestant to be evicted from the Bigg Boss house. In an unexpected turn of events, the Bigg Boss had asked the contestants to name one who they think should be asked to go. Urvashi got six votes, which eventually led to her ouster. Urvashi had participated in the show as a vichitra jodi with Deepak Thakur. However, after the Bigg Boss dissolved the pairs, the two had a fallout and could never reconcile. In an exclusive interview, Urvashi spoke about friend-turned-foe Deepak, his liking for Somi Khan and Sreesanth -her newfound brother. What do you think is biggest reason for your exit? I am not a loud person. Who do you think should have been evicted if not you? What led to your fallout with your jodi partner Deepak? There was lack of understanding between us. Deepak and other Bigg Boss 12 contestants were always involved in planning and plotting, which I never liked. What is the use of all these things when you have to play according to the tasks and games given by the Bigg Boss? In a captaincy task, some of the contestants wanted to make you the captain. You had patched up with Deepak at that time and had even apologised to him. Was it a strategy? I never made any game plan. I said what was in my heart. I would not have fought with him then. Do you think Deepak can win Bigg Boss 12? He had previously claimed that he can take home the trophy. He can win if he plays honestly. Who is playing well and has the calibre to win the title? The one who plays by heart will win. If you ask me to name one, I will say Karanvir Bohra can win if he starts playing well. Have you patched up with Deepak now? No, there is nothing like a patch-up. I just spoke to him formally. It is his choice if he wants to understand me or not. For how long could I let him play with my self-esteem? So, I just left him and ignored him completely. I am not sure if I will ever talk to him again. Deepak is showing interest in Somi Khan. Do you think it is his strategy or genuine love? This can be a strategy as this has come up very recently. There was nothing of the sort earlier. He also said that they have a student-teacher relationship. I also think it was fake, else why will Anup ji himself call it staged after leaving the house. But Jasleen has a different take? Did you make any good friends in the house? Srishty Rode, Karanvir and Dipika Kakar. Who do you consider your biggest enemy? Sreesanth, but Surbhi Rana is no less. Sreesanth calls you his sister. Will that relationship continue post Bigg Boss as well? Yes, I am sure this relationship will continue after Bigg Boss I am not sure about how will he be with others, but I am sure he will continue to be my brother outside the house. He was very loyal towards me and everybody loves him in the house. All are like that. So, maybe all are fake. What have you learnt in the Bigg Boss house? What are your future plans now? I would continue singing and would enroll in a fashion designing course. Follow htshowbiz for more First Published:
