This set of 54 "Code Cards" accompanies Explode the Code Books 1 through 3 1/blog.quintoapp.comt for reinforcing the workbook lessons or extending practice time, this card set includes the 26 letters of the alphabet as well as consonant digraphs, blends, vowel digraphs, and diphthongs.

Wizards of the Coast[edit] When the series first launched in English in late , Wizards of the Coast handled publishing. This card pack was printed and distributed in December to select retailers and at Magic: The Gathering MTG trading card shows as a limited production run. This is known because the 1st Edition stamps were applied onto shadowless cards after the first print run batch of Shadowless cards and helps explain why error cards existed after the first printing of Shadowless Card Demo Packs. Some of the more popular examples are Charizard , Blastoise , Venusaur and Pikachu. This set also had a 2-player starter set , containing two half-sized decks and a play mat with no intended strategy. The "1st issue" print and a few of the following "2nd issue" prints have a slightly different design than the standard "unlimited" "3rd issue" prints. These early prints are generally brighter in color, use a thinner font, have the year appear twice in the copyright notice and lack the shadow around the pictures. Because of this, these cards are known as "shadowless" cards among collectors. Since not many prints were printed as "shadowless", these cards are rarer than the "unlimited" print. Cards printed right before the release of Base Set 2 have the year included in their copyright notices. These cards are known as "4th issue" cards, and are also rarer than the "unlimited" print. After being a very small set in Japan, the English set started the trend of having alternate holographic and non-holographic editions of rare cards, effectively doubling the number of rares in the set. Some cards featured were Pikachu, Gloom, and Victreebel. Unlike base, it had 2 preconstructed decks. The expansion symbol resembles a Vileplume and it has 64 cards. These holos sell for higher than the amount normal jungle holos sell for. All 16 holos from the set have the no symbol error. The rarest card in the first edition jungle set is a 1st edition promo "Ivy Pikachu", which was mistakenly printed with the set. There are rumored to be only one in 10 booster boxes. Fossil contains the fewest cards of any standard set in the card game Future sets would often use a gimmick to differentiate its cards from other sets. Wizards of the Coast had a trend of releasing these compilation sets for most of the trading card game series they sold. This is also the first set to include a card exclusive to the English-language version, though it was eventually released for the Japanese counterpart, as well. As part of a promotion , an American-only Dark Raichu can be found in this set, though it is the rarest card, as a "secret" card that numbered above the regular set number: The card was also available in Australian sets. Its symbol is an amphitheatre with a black stage and white tiers. Its name comes from the Gym Leaders it focuses around and how these first four Gym Leaders have relatively optimistic and carefree personalities compared to those featured in Gym Challenge. While Sabrina and Blaine are also represented in this set, the most attention is paid to the first four met in the video games: Brock , Misty , Lt. Surge , and Erika. However, in the anime, he also carried a Vulpix , a Fire-type , which is also included in this set. This set is also the first set to introduce Stadium cards, trainers that stay in play until another Stadium card comes into play. Its expansion symbol is an amphitheatre and black tiers, the inverse of the Gym Heroes symbol. It also has a set of cards. Its symbol is a pair of stars, one in front of the other. Neo is Greek for "new", and Genesis is Greek for "birth" or "beginning". Darkness and Metal, each with their own Energy cards. The design on the cards have also changed, now looking closer to the Japanese version. The hit points displayed on the upper-right is now smaller, and its color has changed from red to black. The statistics on the bottom of the card now have dune-shaped indentations in the background immediately behind each stat. Two cards from this set were banned from tournament play: It was at this point the 2 different play formats were realized: Unlimited allowing all cards to be played , and Limited where only the Neo Genesis cards could be played this limited format would go through a few changes where as more sets were released where the rules were changed to "Neo Genesis and newer cards are allowed to be played in official tournaments" this would later be changed to be "only the 8 most recent sets are legal for tournament play". At this point the idea of "proxy" cards became frequent at tournaments where an older card could be used as a placeholder for a card a player only had a single print of.

Its symbol is a Mayan temple. The Movie , they seem to be of Central or South American origin. Each could affect the game in different ways related to a word starting with the letter the Unown represents. Though it is often considered the 10th set, it was actually a promotional set, sold as a complete collection in the form of a specially-packaged box rather than as booster packs. The mini-set only contains a total of 18 cards. When arranged in the correct way, every illustration used in this set forms a single larger image. It also includes three more of the Unown introduced in Neo Discovery. This set almost completes the Unown alphabet started in Neo Discovery R was left out, but was eventually given a card in another set years later. J was also left out, being a Promo. The Legendary Collection is the sequel to Base Set 2 , made up entirely of reprints from the first four sets: Its purpose is to make these cards legal in tournament play; otherwise, these cards would be considered "too old. Strangely, even though this set is an amalgamation of four sets, this set contains fewer cards than any of the following three. It is the first to use the e-Reader: By scanning a dot code found on the bottom of all of the cards and the sides of some, the e-Reader can display patterns, produce sounds, or other various novelties. However, none of these features are required for play. Because of its completely new format, this was thought to be a good time to balance the card game with less powerful versions of previously printed cards. For example, Energy Removal 2 serves an identical purpose to Energy Removal from the Base Set , except a coin must be flipped to determine if the effects are successful. However, this set also introduces the Supporter card , a type of Trainer card that now dominates competitive play. Its symbol is a skyline within a water droplet. This set is the second of three to extensively use the e-Reader. Aquapolis introduces minigames playable by scanning in dot codes from multiple cards in any order. While Technical Machines were dabbled upon in Expedition, Aquapolis is the set to make use of them. Technical Machines would be released sparingly from this point onward. This power was written on the Aquapolis cards Kingdra , Lugia , and Nidoking , all of which are holofoil. Note that this power does not allow the player to attach an additional energy card per turn. Of the cards, the first 32 were designated with an "H" before the number. The 33rd card started at number "1. In addition, there were 4 cards that received 2 versions: Golduck 50a, 50b , Drowzee 74a, 74b , Mr. Mime 95a, 95b , and Porygon a, b. These cards are identical except for the data they show when swiped through the e-Reader. Its symbol is a pair of mountains with a halo around the taller one. This is the last set published by Wizards of the Coast and has cards. This set is the last of three to extensively use the e-Reader. These cards normally carry a much higher trade value on eBay and other online retailers than normal cards from this set. However, even normal cards from Skyridge are more valuable than normal cards from other sets, due to the fact that Skyridge booster packs were very hard to find compared to other sets. The numbering system for Skyridge is similar to that of Aquapolis. The first 32 cards begin with an "H" and the 33rd card starts the numbering at "1", and thus the number only goes up to There are no "a" and "b" versions in Skyridge as there were in Aquapolis. Its symbol is a jewel with a brilliant cut , viewed from above. However, the dot codes on the left side of the card are gone, replaced with a single dot code on the bottom. This set yet again changes the layout of the cards; except for the dot code at the bottom which is now absent , it is exactly the same as the Japanese layout and is the format used up to this day. Its symbol is a pair of fossils: It has a set of cards. The Sandstorm name comes from the fact that the player must retrieve these fossils in the video game from within a sandstorm. This set brings back the Mysterious Fossil from the Fossil set and expands on it with the Claw Fossil, which can be made into Anorith , and the Root Fossil, which can be made into Lileep. The Mysterious Fossil plays the same role as before, which is to evolve it into Omanyte , Kabuto , or Aerodactyl. EX Team Magma V. This set contains 95 cards and was the last set to feature e-Reader compatibility. Its symbol is a trapezoid with six equally-spaced smaller dots surrounding it. This entire setup is within a solid white irregular hexagon. This set contains different cards This set revolves around three concepts: The set had some extra cards: Its symbol is an emblem of Team Rocket, a shield-like shape with a black bold R in the center.
