

RE: Videocon D2H HD Channel List (New)- As on Nov Also can u pls list out what are all the HD channels left in D2H. So that we can come to know, how many more HD channels are left in D2H.

The phased rollout of digitization across the entire country is giving all DTH operators to add a huge chunk of subscribers at each interval, numbers that usually may not have come so easily in the normal course of things. In the end, it all depends on how the operators can entice consumers, with the primary aspect always being channel packages. Videocon d2h has a fair amount of advantage in that regard, since it offers the maximum number of channels, ahead of the likes of Dish TV, Airtel Digital TV and Tata Sky. Installation The typical setup for Videocon d2h has well. The outdoor equipment includes a dish antenna, a dual LNB and two parallel wires connecting the dish to the set top box. While we have seen some installations that make do with only one wire coming down from the dish and getting upgraded to a parallel connection using a splitter somewhere in the line, the installation team from Videocon refused to do any such temporary measures, even though it would have meant considerable time and effort saving on their part. Any drilling for getting the wires indoors were done quickly and precisely. It is imperative that the dish is installed at a place that does not have any interference in the direct line of sight to the satellite, and the installation team usually lists all options possible at that location for you before the installation proceeds. The Videocon d2h installation team was very polite, doing the job very quickly and professionally, with minimal fuss. On that particular day of the installation at our end, there were some server issues, and the activation did take a couple of hours. All have the GB hard drive internally, with the only difference being that Airtel uses a 3. There is no power brick in en route, something that the other two DVRs have. The white and black colour combination looks good, but there is that plasticky feel throughout. The channel change and volume control keys are well placed, bit the other keys are a bit of a jumble. Your fingers never really get the memory of where most of the keys like menu, options, guide, info, mosaic, active services etc. We believe that Videocon used to offer a universal remote at one point of time, and it is a tad perplexing that they discontinued it! Performance What attracts you to the Videocon d2h service is the sheer number advantage in terms of the channels on offer, over the rivals. Only Dish TV comes anywhere close, to be honest. However, that is half the job done. If the user experience falls short, then we do have a serious problem. Post installation and activation of Videocon d2h, you get to use the service in detail, something you may not be able to do fully at a demo zone or at a store. We did exactly that â€” used it as the primary DTH connection everyday â€” and the results are rather disappointing. The positive points first. The picture quality on almost all SD channels is very good. Speaking of which, all channels on Videocon d2h have fairly subdued colour richness, side by side comparison with Tata Sky on the same TV with the same settings. We had to bump up the colour slider by 20 points on the TV to get a relatively similar colourful picture as Tata Sky. Audio on Videocon d2h is definitely clearer than Tata Sky on some channels, because of lesser processing by the DTH operator. Take the example of the National Geographic HD channel. Tata Sky has fairly butchered the audio, something very noticeable because we were using a 5. On Videocon, the audio was as it is largely supposed to be. Full marks to Videocon d2h for the clarity on all channels, and for audio the way it is supposed to come across all five speakers! You have the ability to schedule recordings via the program guide, set up time based recordings and pause and rewind live broadcasts. However, till now, we have not been able to figure out to set up series link recordings for certain daily shows that we watch on Star World HD. Select the program from the EPG, and go into the details. You get the option to set up reminder, record or find a repeat of the program. However, we could not find the option to set up a series link that will record new episodes every day. First up, the Videocon d2h user interface has a couple of issues. The layout is not very intuitive and it does take a while to understand the way around it. Sometimes the X button is supposed, and sometimes the return key works. Surprisingly, the channel tag key and the return key do the same task, so why have two keys cluttering up the remote? Once you get beyond the navigation bit, the layout does seem a tad too boxy and dated. We faced some serious issues with the HD-DVR that was installed after we had purchased the connection. Sometimes, it just hangs and refuses to change channels â€” unplugging crudely and then reconnecting the power after 20 seconds is the only solution. Unlike the standard Videocon d2h HD box that starts up at the channel you last saw before fully shutting it down, the DVR starts at the Home Channel with the advertising blaring at you from the first minute. This is something that is annoying across all DTH operators. Now, when you press the channel change key again, the DVR changes two channels. The local area technical team from Videocon d2h, after seeing the sluggishness of the DVR box installed at our place, took it upon themselves to provide an update for the software. A couple of days later, they had a new software copy installed on the box, via the USB drive. The UI remains the same. However, it still remains very sluggish, and most of the other issues remain. Bottom Line Videocon d2h attracts you with the sheer variety of channels on offer. But, there are issues with the quality of hardware and the problems with the software that sour the experience. Until and unless Videocon can solve these issues, at least the software ones urgently with the next upgrade, we would have to hold back and not recommend the service. The extra channels over the rivals is a good attraction, but the problems are a tad too annoying to live with on a daily basis. Yes, Tata Sky has lesser channels on offer, but there is absolutely no doubt that most of the popular HD and SD channels are there on the platform. And the good quality hardware, slick UI and a premium offering mean you will face a consistent and problem free usage experience. Videocon D2H has the clear lead!
