Then she met Dr. Jason Fitzroy and fell instantly in love. Fitzroy found her a job at the hospital and gave her a new sense of self-respect. He also gave Katherine her first taste of the freedom missing from her earlier years. But Katherine knew she could never be truly free not while her heart was a prisoner of love. Ok, you have to be in the mood for a Cinderella story where the evil stepmother has been recast as a managing, manipulative older brother, and where the prince has been replaced by a sometimes-arrogant doctor. Katherine Marsh is the heroine Neels most liked to write about -- the gently bred, meant for better things gal who was never meant for a career, and somehow fell on hard times usually through the death of her parents. Specifically, Katherine is basically an unpaid slave to her brother, his wife, and their largely-ignored children. She cooks, she cleans, she takes care of the children. Comparisons to Other Authors: I think most people either find her soothing or like the boringest writer ever I find her soothing! It amazes me that Betty Neels always manages to make each book just a wee bit different even though many of the plot lines are similar. This is one of her Cinderella stories. Handsome doctor comes to the rescue of a sweet, little mouse of a girl whose living a horrible life with her brother and his wife. I loved the fact that he asks her to marry him at least half a dozen times, but I hated the fact that she was so silly and tried to run away from him even though she adored him. It all got ironed out in the end very nicely and his reaction to her admission about how long she had been in love with him was worth waiting pages for. There are still pitfalls to avoid and misunderstandings to keep the two occupied until they reach a happy conclusion. The book arrived in good condition and was a pleasure to read. She was much too busy having her hair done and getting manicures and going out to lunch with her friends and attending various committee meetings. I was happy when Dr. It was not a great job but at least she got paid! I also especially liked the way the book started with a baby being found out in the snow and rescued by Dr. I was disappointed that there was not more follow up about what happened to that baby. I was also a bit disappointed with Dr. He asked her numerous times to marry him but she never could quite believe that he meant it because she was sure that he was in love with and planned to marry Dodie, the granddaughter of an old couple who were his patients. Of course, I think Katherine had legitimate reason to think he was not serious in wanting to marry her. For one thing, Dodie was constantly lying to Katherine and telling her that she and Jason were an item when in fact they were not. Also, one time when Jason asked Katherine to marry him, first he said that he had a date later that evening with Dodie and then literally the next words out of his mouth was a proposal of marriage. And Katherine refused him. If he had been a lot younger, I would have understood that perhaps he was trying to make Katherine jealous so she would agree to marry him but at his age it seemed more than a little strange for him to be involved in that sort of game. The lack of communication is so many books not just Neels books absolutely leaves me scratching my head. I can say without hesitation that she loves all of these books. As she has said, "The plots may all be somewhat similar and the stories quaint, but I enjoy them immensely and find them endearing. She now has almost every Betty Neels book available for the Kindle. And the Kindle Paperwhite? She loves the backlight and the ability to make the font larger. Hero dates someone else while proposing to heroine. Katherine, our heroine, is a girl most readers can identify with. Despite being unable to pull off an escape, she does not bend to circumstances without a tart tongue letting her brother and sister-in-law know how she feels. Jason Fitzroy, an Englishman who drives a Bentley. Jason feels sorry for the young woman and helps her as something an afterthought when he sees her situation. His attention and devotion to the spoiled Dodie is puzzling and made the character confusing. Eventually, he actually notices her and proposes repeatedly to Katherine, but continues to see Dodie while making sure Katherine knows it. While Jason is kind, this behavior made him less likable. I felt sorry for Katherine. Misused by her brother, she has little joy in her life. Dodie, of course, tells Katherine lies and insults her- in front of Jason, who makes excuses for her behavior. By the end of the book, she is even more unhappy and confused until the very last page. I did not like that the situation is twisted so that Katherine comes across as being foolish, grumpy, and in the wrong. Thankfully, Neels does not make her crawl back to Jason, something I would have detested, especially after his behavior. Overall, this is a clean, nice romance that deviates little from the Neels formula. I loved how gentle, kind, and patient he was with her. It was a refreshingly different Betty Neely book and I would rank it as my top 5 favorite of her books. I loved this book so much. I had to buy a second copy because I wore out the first one I bought. I read it every year. The main character, Katherine or Katie is a lovely character. If she is outraged, she is calm, sometimes gives a cold "how kind" reaction which turns to the head of her love interest Dr. Katherine is a gentle creature but has a strong personality. She told her mean Brother, that her sister is not delicate, has always been pompous and "so have you! You have to read this! Finding Her Way By Jude Fenton on Nov 12, One cold and rainy night Cupid guided a new mother to a pre-selected spot on the edge of a road where she left her newborn baby son and never looked back. He remained in the background, guiding her as needed, but allowed her to find her own way to his heart. I have over 50 of her titles in my collection. The heroine is an unpaid drudge for her brother and his wife. She is rescued by a doctor and becomes a companion for an elderly couple, then a job at a hospital. There are a few bumps to the romance, but all comes well in the end. By Amazon Customer on Sep 10, Loved it! Betty Neels wrote such sweet, heartwarming books! It is Jason Fitzroy, a white knight on his charger to rescue her a doctor who has found an abandoned newborn on the roadside. Katherine helps him get the baby warmed and then over the protests of the obnoxious Joyce 4. He pays for her breakfast at the hospital canteen, too, and then takes her back to her home. He has already figured out what kind of situation she is in, having been smitten by her remarkably fine grey eyes. Katherine dreams about him a lot over the next few days, having fallen for him at first sight “ and who could fault her for her dreams, with the dismal life she leads?! So when he shows up again a few days later and offers her a job as a companion to an elderly couple who are his patients, she jumps at the chance. The Graingers are a nice old couple; Betty, it is really a shame that you saddled them with such a nasty piece of work as Dodie for a granddaughter. Katherine has settled nicely into her role as companion, even winning over the rather sour housekeeper. Fitzroy twice a week and has a couple of hours each afternoon to explore the town I admit to being envious of Katherine being so close to Salisbury Cathedral “ I, too, would love to have the time to explore it. Dodie has apparently long been determined to become Mrs. Fitzroy and sees Katherine as competition. She devises a plan to temporarily move her grandparents away, leaving Katherine without a job. Jason contrives to see her often, although she is only aware of bumping into him often. She also meets his cousin, Edward, who is staying with him for a time. She goes to the midnight service at the cathedral and runs into Jason, Dodie and Edward. Jason insists she come over to his house; they have snacks and hot chocolate and champagne. On the evening of Boxing Day, Katie runs into Jason; he invites her over for tea, then convinces her to stay for dinner after which Jason and Edward teach her to play poker. They also make plans to go to Stourhead on the next day, which turns out to be a lovely day in the snow. She turns him down. Jason takes her home and again asks her to marry him. She says of course not and reminds him he is taking Dodie out; he says a man has to keep his hand in. Potts, the landlady, comes down with the flu and goes to hospital a few days. When she is released, Jason asks Katie to accompany her for a long weekend to his cottage at Bucklers Hard. On the drive to the cottage he asks if she has given any more thought to marrying him. When he leaves them at the cottage, Katie tells him to drive carefully. He says she sounds like a wife, so he feels justified in behaving like a husband; he swoops and kisses her hard. She assumes it is Edward, but when she arrives at the coffee shop, finds her brother. Henry tries to get her to go back with him, but she refuses. She is angry and shaken and it shows on her face when she runs into Jason later. She tells him about it. The next day, Matron calls her into her office and there is Henry. He has given Matron a cock-and-bull story about how his wife is desperately ill and they need Katherine to come help out. Katie says no, but Matron insists she should do her duty to her family. Joyce laughs and says now Katie has to stay. Katie says she will get a bus or whatever. Joyce leaves also; Katie cleans up the children and the nursery and cooks them some breakfast. When Joyce comes back, she taunts Katie that the buses have stopped for the day and she will have to spend the night. Meanwhile, Jason had seen Katie leave the hospital with a case and as soon as he was free, found out from Andy where she had gone. Oh, Jason, take me away from here! He takes her to his home for supper and again asks her to marry him. He tells her to get used to the idea of marrying him. The Graingers are back and ask Katie to tea, over which Mrs. Instead she runs into him just outside the hospital, he takes her home and FINALLY makes a proper proposal in which he tells her he loves her. She tries to be stubborn but he convinces her with the idea of a quick, quiet wedding. He says he lost his heart the moment he saw her in her old dressing gown looking like a mouse with the most beautiful eyes in the world and that he hardly dared breathe for fear she would take fright and scamper off. She replies that she fell in love at the hospital canteen because he had told them to give her a good breakfast. This was very nice. I have a soft spot for the poor, plucky heroines. In spite of her downtrodden state, Katie has plenty of backbone. And Jason is just perfect for her, giving her the opportunity to get back on her feet and find her self-confidence. Edward is a nice brotherly
