Very good, but depressing! I wonder how much of the details are autobiographical. This was despite the fact that pretty much every character is fairly unlikable, and that includes a nine-year-old child! Told from multiple perspectives of two divorced people who fall in love and endure a passionate but challenging romance, and brief POVs of their three children who all have their own deep-seated issues. I want some depth, something worth thinking about. These characters were so unlikeable, irritating, unrealistic, unreasonable, thoughtless, self centered. I spent a great deal of time being angry with these characters from the very beginning. Who behaves that way?! Too many people do. Your behavior might have unintended consequences, especially if there are children involved. Adults are supposed to finally reach a point in which they can be responsible for and be able to care for, themselves and others. In fact, creating the perfect fantasy childhood for them, is more about the parent than the child. When a marriage disintegrates, the best interests of the children must always come first. In most cases, divorced parents can still parent jointly. Things can be worked out when people talk -and listen generously. Who was listening to these children? No one -not even the perfect parent Claire. There is SO much more in this story to chew on. There are happy moments. There are many different kinds of happy to be found. Hopefully we grow through it, as we grew through adolescence, into better and better versions of ourselves, with a broader, healthier, wiser perspective. It is more the case that this was an exhausting read that necessitates recovery time. The reader is assaulted by a persistent hopelessness that permeates the life of Claire, a 39 year old divorcee and mother of two.

Chapter 7 : T49 - Not Sure About This One :: World of Tanks Blitz General Discussions

Worst Team of the Day Meme Alright. Siegfried Line assault. I am attacking in a T55a and it is a tier X battle. We won pretty well except for people feeding the enemy camper pluton (at H0) at the end.

Chapter 8 : How do you play your T49? : WorldofTanks

I don't have the T49 but I find the points you mention, gun handling and passive scouting, odd in reference to the T The 13 90 certainly has terrible gun handling for sure. But in comparison to the T
