Chapter 1 : Never Too Young to Rock () - IMDb

You're never too young for that. However, even with proper care, you'll eventually begin to see some signs of aging that you may want to remedy. That's when you need to speak with a medical professional that can offer the services necessary to provide you with the solutions you desire.

Quymbee Chen is exactly the type of teenager I hope my animated show, "Dot," inspires young girls to be. Quymbee Chen is a year-old working as the community manager for startup tech company Jewelbots as a part of her gap year. Quymbee started out interning for Jewelbots when she was a sophomore at The Bronx High School of Science, and she began working full time once she graduated. When I was an intern in high school working for Jewelbots, I fit closer to their audience range than any of the employees themselves, so I had a lot of fun helping to give them feedback on trends, language usage and branding opinions. I started working with Jewelbots even when it was still on Kickstarter. I have seen how the product has grown and developed, as I helped to test the prototypes and got to know the audience. Since the beginning of my work with Jewelbots, I have always focused on audience targeting. As community manager at Jewelbots, I focus on making content for our audience, which is 10 to 14-year-old girls. This involves photography, reaching out to public figures and, of course, clever tweeting. I feel like this is where most of my work as a teen comes in, since I do put my own voice into it a lot. For instance, working towards equality in STEM but exclusively advertising towards girls, people ask, "What about the boys? Is that really equal? However, you just have to continue to stick by your purpose. Wanting to study STEM in college has been an interesting conflict for me, though. Is it because I grew up with a mathematician programmer type of dad who has always bumper-bowled me in that direction? Is it because, as a female, I want to make a statement against gender stereotypes? I code the Jewelbot like a user would, and it really is exciting when I can get something to work! I help to write the instructions for the "Getting Started" website on Jewelbots, so this involves a bit of website programming to display the content up. The first time I was applying to college, I wanted to be college-bound. This time applying, I want to learn.

Why Strategic Relationships Matter, and Why You're Never too Young to Start Building Them A letter to my college-aged kid sister and every other young person fearing life after graduation A sister's job is never done, especially when there's a year age gap.

BlockedUnblock FollowFollowing Korin Torrence is an Innovative Marketer and Brand Strategist, specializing in the implementation and execution of strategic, competitive marketing initiatives. In a time when the job market has never been more competitive, most employers are no longer impressed by the academic institution highlighted on your resume. What matters to them now are two simple things: The thing that I wish someone told me when I was young, is that we all start this rat race at the same starting line. Sure, some of your friends have trust funds and others maxed out credit cards, but the beauty lies in the fact that despite starting in the same place, these same people just might end up in some pretty awesome places down the road. Check-in on people just to say hi. A wise mentor once said in your first job pay attention to the popular kids and the nerds. The popular kids at work will always rise quickly in their careers, because work is hard and having a work life balance is even harder. People, no matter their career level will always want to be around the person that they can grab a drink with after work. Avoid them at all cost. They are too fun and might cost you your job instead of helping you find another one. Ok, now back to what I was saying. In the age of tech and health do not sleep on these people. Thanks to the age of social media, you have all the tools needed to do so at your fingertips. Seize Every Opportunity to Showcase and Grow Your Network Interviews are no longer centered around telling a potential employer about your greatest character flaw being your inability to delegate because your work ethic has turned you into a perfectionist and overachiever. That interview is your opportunity to differentiate yourself from all the people whose resumes look just like yours. The interactions you had with senior level people at that internship. No matter what stage you are in your career, the deeper your Rolodex the more valuable you are to your company. You just need to know how to play the game. Again, its ok not to have it figured out. Heck, most of us adults are still trying to figure out. Attend conferences and events with the goal of leaving with a certain number of business cards and more importantly follow-up.

Check out these innovative ways to get your children involved in service. Once they learn how great it feels to make a difference, chances are good they will become life-long volunteers. Morguefile user bjwebbiz A visit from children can bring much-needed energy and social interaction to nursing home residents. Spending time with nursing home residents can help children feel more comfortable around people with disabilities and impairments – a valuable asset to carry into adulthood. And being around young people can decrease loneliness, delay mental decline, and reduce the risk of disease in older people. Age Well coordinates services and care for four counties in Vermont. Director of Volunteer Services Erica Marks says there are no restrictions on bringing young children along on Meals on Wheels deliveries or participating in their Friendly Visitor program with tykes in tow, as long as the senior being served is okay with it. If you want your child to see the positive impact he can have on a senior citizen, check with your local nursing homes and services for the aging. Or you can look into starting a playgroup in a nursing home. Flickr User Blue Mountains Library So, wielding a hammer and climbing a ladder may not be ideal activities for your younger child, but many organizations like Habitat for Humanity make the effort to include children in their service opportunities. For instance, Habitat Charlotte lists six ways for young people to get involved, from helping to welcome a family into their new home, to donating Legos for their Lego Build Guild. Habitat Charlotte volunteer opportunities for children, students, and young professionals can be found here. It gives them the chance to learn how others live. At this age children can pitch in to help the homeless, work with wildlife, and support people in the military, to name a few. Show Them You Care Source: Operation Gratitude GreatNonprofits Page Operation Gratitude collects, packages, and sends donated items to deployed service members. Collecting and preparing care packages for the troops is a great way for friends to spend time together while making a difference. Creatures Great and Small Source: Carolina Raptor Center GreatNonprofits page Older children with a soft spot for animals can make a big difference by volunteering at a wildlife sanctuary. The Carolina Raptor Center has a Junior Volunteer program where children 11 and up can help out weekly or twice a month. The center treats more than 1, injured owls, eagles, hawks, falcons, and vultures each year. What a unique opportunity to interact with some majestic wildlife! The Humane Society has a list of wildlife rehabilitation services in every state so you can look for volunteer opportunities for your animal-loving loved one. High School Age Volunteering in high school is a fantastic way to get service hours, sharpen your skills and make connections for the future. Use Those Skills Source: Momentum Tutoring Facebook Page Students who work hard to develop a skill can share those skills as volunteers. Best of all, that volunteer position could turn into a paid tutoring job! Make Those Connections Source: Internships and Junior Boards give high school students skills and connections for the future. Chapter 4 : You're Never Too Young () - IMDb

You are never too young to take an internship or volunteer position in the nonprofit field. Not only have I been meeting younger interns, but I have also been meeting younger board members. I have worked with or heard about several nonprofit boards that are adopting youth advisory committees or junior board positions.

Email Last Updated May 2, 3: Together with her brothers David and Geoff, Cook started social networking site myYearbook. How does it feel to be a successful entrepreneur at such a tender age and how can others emulate her success? Was starting a company something you thought about for a long time or was it something you just jumped into? It was something I always wanted to do. My oldest brother Geoff is 11 years older than me, and when he was in college he started his own website. My mom would send Dave and I to visit him -- we would stay at his house for three months every summer. We were only like 8 or 9 when he started this site and so we were only about 10 when we saw what it had become and that it was just so exciting. So when we had the idea it was just, like, now we have to go for it because we know it can be done. Were you surprised when you started your own business or did the experience match up with your expectations? It pretty much matched up. We were warned that it would be insanely stressful and a giant time commitment. When we were working on building the site, we were working until 3am each night and then high school had to start at 7: We expected it to be a ton of work but not as much fun in the beginning. It was always exciting. That was a little bit unexpected because when we first started, we got members in just my high school in the first week. What do you think is the key to being a good entrepreneur -- do you need a certain personality type? The main thing is the idea and the ability to persevere to actually make your idea become reality because there are tons of roadblocks. For instance my age came up a lot, and then just being in the market in general. How did you deal with skepticism about your age? When we first started the site even people in my own class were very skeptical, but once we started adding members and once people realized how passionate I was about the idea, and how much I clearly believed in it and could talk about, they started becoming believers in it too. My passion about the site was contagious. You chose to go and get a degree even though you had a business that was already off the ground. Why did you think college would be valuable for you? I always wanted to go to college. Since I was little that was always my dream. But I think it really helps me to be open-minded. There are things I never would have learned or would never have been able to master that easily without instruction. And it helps with your network too. Your site is really successful with a young demographic. I feel like a lot of times they just assume what the younger demographic wants. Do you have any other advice for young people who are thinking of starting their own company? Just go for it. If not, it can just become an interesting point on your resume. So do you think you might start another company in the future?

Chapter 5 : It's Never Too Early to Show Your Children the Joy of Volunteering - GreatNonprofits' Blog

When you start a company at a young age, it's the least risky time to do so, because if it fails -- and that is the worst thing that can happen -- you're still living at home like you were before.

A charitable bequest is one or two sentences in your will or living trust that leave to University of Houston a specific item, an amount of money, a gift contingent upon certain events or a percentage of your estate. They allow assets held in the trust to pass directly to beneficiaries without probate court proceedings and can also reduce federal estate taxes. You contribute to the account, which grows tax-free. You can recommend how much and how often you want to distribute money from that fund to UH or other charities. You cannot direct the gifts. An endowed gift can create a new endowment or add to an existing endowment. Tax on the growth in value of an asset—such as real estate or stock—since its original purchase. Securities, real estate or any other property having a fair market value greater than its original purchase price. Real estate can be a personal residence, vacation home, timeshare property, farm, commercial property or undeveloped land. A charitable remainder trust provides you or other named individuals income each year for life or a period not exceeding 20 years from assets you give to the trust you create. You give assets to a trust that pays our organization set payments for a number of years, which you choose. The longer the length of time, the better the potential tax savings to you. When the term is up, the remaining trust assets go to you, your family or other beneficiaries you select. This is an excellent way to transfer property to family members at a minimal cost. You fund this type of trust with cash or appreciated assets—and may qualify for a federal income tax charitable deduction when you itemize. You can also make additional gifts; each one also qualifies for a tax deduction. The trust pays you, each year, a variable amount based on a fixed percentage of the fair market value of the trust assets. When the trust terminates, the remaining principal goes to UH as a lump sum. You fund this trust with cash or appreciated assets—and may qualify for a federal income tax charitable deduction when you itemize. Each year the trust pays you or another named individual the same dollar amount you choose at the start. A beneficiary designation clearly identifies how specific assets will be distributed after your death. A charitable gift annuity involves a simple contract between you and UH where you agree to make a gift to UH and we, in return, agree to pay you and someone else, if you choose a fixed amount each year for the rest of your life.
