A Party for Pooh - Celebrate sunny days and togetherness before leaving the pages of Hundred Acre Wood as Pooh finally gets his paws on some yummy honey. However in , when the renovated Fantasyland reopened, a Winnie the Pooh attraction was notably absent. Plans for location in Toontown Following the success of Who Framed Roger Rabbit , plans were made for a new section of the park located behind Fantasyland. One of the rides that would have gone on the east side of this land was a Winnie the Pooh dark ride in which guests would ride in "spinnable" honey pots much like the Mad Hatter teacup ride in Fantasyland through what was conceptualized as the best scenes from the three Winnie the Pooh featurettes. Pooh arrives in the Magic Kingdom Seven years later, during a period when the character was undergoing a resurgence in popularity, plans for a Winnie the Pooh attraction were approved at a different park: However, planners instead decided to utilize an existing structure: Protesting the closure of Mr. But it has recently gotten a new queue resembling the Hundred Acre Wood. Due to a closure of most of the Skyways connecting Tomorrowland and Fantasyland at Disney Parks across the world, including Tokyo, a space was left in its place. To date, the attraction continues to have some of the longest wait times of any attraction at the Tokyo Disney Resort. The Many Adventures goes to Disneyland The only solution to complete the growing roster was to bring the Winnie the Pooh attraction to Disneyland. An original plan from the mid s had an indoor and outdoor light boat ride featuring a Winnie the Pooh theme, which was shelved by So, a new dark ride was planned. However, Disneyland is the only resort of all five Disney Resorts to have little room for expansion. The only solution to open an attraction in the park was to utilize a current attraction. Fantasyland was ruled out because it contained the least amount of available space and because of the age of its buildings; park managers anticipated that the attraction would be popular and decided to place it in an area that could better accommodate the crowds. Critter Country , a small parcel between New Orleans Square and Frontierland was ultimately chosen, since Winnie the Pooh already had his own greeting area in that land. The area already featured two popular attractions, Splash Mountain and Country Bear Jamboree , the latter being the first attraction to open in the land then Bear Country in Reformatting the Country Bear Jamboree Imagineers chose to replace the Country Bear Jamboree with Pooh due to its lack of popularity, which would require major excavation for space and leveling for the ride. However, then-managers Paul Pressler and Cynthia Harris, both unpopular with Disneyland enthusiasts, ignored this and continued. When it finally opened in , it received large promotions by park management and lines were somewhat long at first, but quickly dropped off. Its turnover rate with guests was low compared to older dark rides in Fantasyland. However, for younger and other guests, the ride is considered fun and another addition to the park. However, amongst all four versions of the attraction, this one is the least popular, in terms of attendance. It was based on a variety of versions of the attraction, but is most similar to the first version at the Magic Kingdom. It remains one of the most visited attractions in Fantasyland. Magic Kingdom and Hong Kong Disneyland version The ride vehicles go out of the load area, and arrive near a giant story-book showing Winnie-the-Pooh and The cars for the ride. The vehicles arrive in the Hundred Acre Wood during a rather blustery day, with Piglet holding onto a broom while being spun around. Pooh is holding onto a balloon while trying to reach for some honey, while Eeyore patronizes him. Meanwhile Roo begins to be blown away as Kanga holds onto him. Thaddeus Toad himself handing a deed over to Owl. There is also a picture of Winnie the Pooh greeting Moley Mr. These were placed as a subtle tribute to Mr. The ride then passes a second giant storybook page, where suddenly Tigger bounces out, whilst the ride vehicles begin to bounce like Tigger. The ride follows Tigger through the Hundred Acre Wood, where he randomly pops up. It transpires that Tigger has pinned Pooh to the floor as he tells him about Heffalumps and Woozles. The ride vehicles then move into a strange room as Pooh floats through. There are objects with eyes and mouths, while giant woozles with jack-in-the-box necks move in front of the guests. The ride moves round some very strange objects: Other funhouse effects are seen as the vehicles make an escape out of the heffalump scene, indicated by an umbrella and a watering can pouring rain over a pot of honey. After this the vehicles arrive in a room painted with rain and cloud patterns, as thunder and lightning go off, and then reenters the Hundred Acre Wood, which is experiencing the rainstorm. The ride vehicles begin to "float", although this is achieved by moving the vehicles at a steady speed. Eeyore complains about the wind and then about the rain. Gopher squirts water out of his mouth. Roo, Rabbit, Tigger, and Owl attempt to save Piglet from floating away, and the ride vehicles move to find Pooh flying around owing to the wind. The vehicles move into the final scene, where everyone apart from Pooh is celebrating that the rain has gone away. Piglet was a sculpted figure with movement, while Tigger, Rabbit, Eeyore, Owl, Kanga, and Roo are illustrations on the wall behind. The vehicles move past Pooh enjoying a load of honey, and then go past a page that reads "The End" before arriving back in the load area. Disneyland version Upon leaving the outdoor load area, the ride vehicles arrive indoors into the Hundred Acre Wood where Pooh is again trying to get the honey with the balloon. With Eeyore and the other characters is Gopher who appears out of his hole to greet the guests. The ride vehicles move into the Heffalump and Woozles dream sequence where the woozles with jack-in-the-box necks watch the guests. This version of the Heffalumps and Woozles scene focuses on the Heffalump and Woozle characters, with the absence of the objects with human eyes and mouths. Instead, Pooh bobs up and down in a balloon suspended above a swirling whirlpool of honey. The mechanism was the one which once lowered "Teddi Barra" from the ceiling in Country Bear Jamboree , the Audio-Animatronic theater presentation previously housed in the show building. As the ride vehicles leave this scene, a subtle tribute to Country Bear Jamboree is suspended above the archway. The heads were taken from theatre 2 of the Country Bear Playhouse. The vehicles enter the start of the finale scene where Pooh is enjoying a smackerel of Pooh eating his honey. As the vehicles move to the load area, several of the gifts Pooh received for his party are shown, and are moved back as the vehicles continue until they finally reach the load area. Designed for both the young and young-at-heart, this Hundred Acre Wood-themed spot includes 4 areas of fun and games: Hunny Wall - Draw shapes with overflowing honey by running your hand against a wall, revealing the Pooh characters behind the honey. One portrait depicts Toadie handing over the deed to the building to Owl, while a portrait of Pooh with Mole can be spotted lying on the floor. At the Disneyland version, a contribute to Country Bear Jamboree is seen. Also in the Disneyland version, Pete Renaday the voice of Henry in the Country Bear shows can be heard as the narrator. Toad giving Owl the deed Mole and Pooh.
