She has a great sense of humour and real talent for conveying the hilarious situations and conversations parents and children get themselves into. I would follow her even if she posted photos of white walls with captions. What part of the world do you live in? I live in a small riverside village on the east coast of England, about an hour from London, along with most of my deeply dysfunctional, big, hilarious, buffet loving family. My village has strong roots in music and art, as well as some keen ping-pongers. How many children do you have and how would you describe them? I have two daughters, Cecily 5 and Lorelei 2. I see threads of similarity between them; an innocent awkwardness that they share, but by and large they are very different creatures. Cecily is an introvert, a little shy and anxious at times, but very quirky and completely full of love. Every morning she calmly sits up at the table whilst I desperately try to get us all ready and quietly makes a gift for someone she was worried about the day before. She chooses art and craft above all activities, quietly gathering things and making small but independent little choices. She can be very misunderstood quiet people often are but to me she is a tiger: Lorelei is a whirlwind. An all singing, dancing, laughing, idiosyncratic, strange little whirlwind. She relishes human interaction, eye contact, and is very tactile. She brought light and laughter into our lives after some very dark years. She is my little elixir. I also have two cats, three chickens, and two tortoises. But I like them a lot less than I like my kids. What are your core family values? Kindness and joy are two fundamentals. I want my children to laugh every single day of their lives. Having fun is so important, but never at the expense of kindness. We talk always about ways to be kind and caring to family, friends, strangers, the environment, animals. I applaud their kindness above all else. Respecting and enjoying who they are, and being patient and understanding with them; are things that both also mean a lot to me, and things that I need to constantly work on; as a parent. How do you spend most of your days? Acting like a bunch of dorks. We read, draw, make dens, dance, cook. We talk about poo a lot. We also see friends most days; we have some real good ones. What is your favourite thing to do as a family? We love snacking, and we love nature, so snacking in nature really floats our boats. We also love camping which sits well within the aforementioned favourites. My hope is for us to one day travel a lot as a family too. What are you passionate about? I also read like a motherflipper. Unequivocally and without apology, they are the best people I have ever met. Thank you, Nelly, for indulging me with your witty answers and sharing your reflections on parenting.
