Chapter 1 : Editions of Wonderful Ways to Love a Grandchild by Judy Ford

With over half a million copies of her books in print, Judy Ford, M.S.W. is the best-selling author of Conari's Wonderful Ways books, which include Wonderful Ways to Love a Teen, Wonderful Ways to Love a Child, Wonderful Ways to Be a Family, Wonderful Ways to Love a Grandchild, and Wonderful Ways to Be a Stepparent.

Aside from being a wonderful way to bond with your young child, music is a great tool to connect the generations and help a little one know about their history, heritage and background. By sharing even the simplest songs and stories, a grandparent helps a young child discover that they are part of an on-going story and have a special place in their family, no matter what their age or ability. Other folks might be a bit stumped for choices. So this is where I suggest you turn to the classics – classic kids songs that is. What songs did you love as a child? What do you remember from school, from holidays, from playgrounds or summer camps. I always encourage people to become part of the folk process by adapting some of their favorite songs and making them special for their grandchild, their situation or their family. You can also play around with some well-loved songs like Bah, Bah Black Sheep. If your child has some vision and is learning colors, why not sing the song about the color of the clothes someone has on – Bah, bah, orange sheep, bah, bah polka-dotted sheep – you get the picture. I have a grandchild that I love and Mary is her name – o. In this way, music can become a truly creative process as opposed to simply a lullaby meant to whisk a child off to sleep. Finger plays or songs with movements can still be great fun and – guess what – your grandchild can often do them or learn them faster than you. You can adapt fingerplays to the ability level of the child, or sit them on your lap and let them hold your hands while you enact the movements. You can use fingerplays that most folks remember such as Itsy Bitsy Spider or discover some new ones such as Green Grapes where you get to count backwards using the fingers of your hand: Five green grapes growing on a vine. Hold up five fingers. You can explore music, new songs and rhythms together and create some special musical moments that brighten both your days. Tell A Musical Tale Most of my favorite musical tunes come wrapped in great stories. A song like Grand Old Flag means so much more to a child if they know it was part of a special picnic honoring returning soldiers. Feel free to tell stories from your childhood about the songs you love the most. What songs bring back holiday memories for you and who taught them to you? Did you ever have to go to summer camp and felt like singing a version of Hello Mudda, Hello Faddah lyrics below? Share the songs that made you giggle uncontrollably, taught you to jump rope or inspired your faith to new heights. Then Grab a CD! Remember, your grandchild is not only a captive audience, but also a captivated one. Their grandparent is someone whose voice and stories they love to hear, even if you might feel self-conscious about your ability to sing. Singing and making music with a young child is a great way to spend time together. I hope this article inspires you to make or share some music with your toddler and do it in a way that creates a lasting memory that warms both your hearts – forever.
