Lesson Plan Connection mins: Students should be seated on the carpet with a partner. They will be expected to turn and talk to this partner throughout the lesson. Readers we have learned so much during our informational text unit. Just like when we read, we should set a purpose for our reading. An author will either persuade, entertain, or inform you about a topic. To persuade means to convince someone to do something. We see persuasion all the time in our daily lives. For example, when you watch an advertisement for a new game or pair of shoes, the writer of the commercial is trying to persuade you to buy those items. Authors can do the same thing in their writing. A writer might give you specific facts that support their opinions in an attempt to persuade you to feel a certain way or to believe their argument. We must be critical readers to understand what an author is trying to persuade us to believe about a certain idea. Teacher reads aloud the first paragraph. I noticed that the author states his argument in a question. The author wants us to understand that some companies want to drill oil in a place where many animals live. I wonder what the author is trying to persuade us to believe? I will keep reading to find out. Teacher reads aloud the second paragraph. In this paragraph the author is telling me what the oil industry thinks. Turn and tell your partner what the people in the oil industry believe. Students share out responses. You are all exactly right. The oil industry believes that drilling for oil will reduce how much gas costs in the United States. Teacher reads aloud paragraph three. In this paragraph I know that the author is telling me what he believes. Turn and tell your partner what the author thinks. I know the author wants to persuade me to believe the same thing. The author provided many facts to inform my decision with the goal of persuading me to feel the same way. Independent Reading mins: I have two separate paragraphs to show you. As you read these independently I want you to think about what the author is persuading you to believe. Then record your response under the articles. Teacher should collect the worksheet from independent work. This can be used to assess which students mastered the skill and which students need more practice. At the end of the first three lessons, students will be asked to distinguish between the three types. This lesson sets the stage for the higher order skill. Harder articles could be pulled for enrichment or the articles could be read aloud for struggling readers.
